HEATING SYSTEM AS AN AIR COOLER

Moving Air Stirred by Propeller in Modern Warm Air Heating Plant Provides "Dog Days" Relief.

PARADOXICAL as it may seem, the same heating system can now be the source of summer comfort as well as winter comfort. This is made possible, points out the Holland Institute of Technology, of Holland, Mich., by modern warm air heating systems. These are equipped with an electrical fan to operate air propeller unit. In the wintertime, when the heating system is used for supplying heat, the air propeller unit serves to keep the warmed air circulating from the heater and creates a uniform motion of the air of sufficient force to provide a uniform temperature at all levels in all rooms. And it is this unit which makes it possible for the home-owner to enjoy complete comfort in his home during the hot, sultry weather of "dog days."

Homes become uncomfortable during sultry weather due to the absence of air motion and to the formation of layers of pockets of stagnant air which soon become overheated and stifling. Even opening windows and doors fails to provide the necessary "breeze for me." The fact of the matter is that the current that is taking is moving air, and here is where the modern warm air heating system brings comfort to the home-owner in summer, and incidentally gives him a year 'round use of his heating plant investment.

By placing the air propeller in operation, the air in the room is forced into general circulation, just as warmed air is circulated during winter. The effect is to break up the pockets of stagnant, overheated air, the stimulation of which plus the gentle air motion produced by the air propeller, creates a physical comfort virtually equivalent to a drop of 10 to 15 degrees in temperature. The effect is similar to that of a slow fanning or automobile ride, as the motion of the air developed by the propeller is sufficient to carry away bodily heat and bodily moisture, thus creating physical comfort.

Home-owners will find that the action of this air propeller is sufficient to produce an indoor comfort in their homes superior to that enjoyed in many of the so-called "cooled" theaters.

WOOD WISDOM

If you buy home materials at home you don't have to argue if something goes wrong; you can get hold of the architect, the carpenter and get things adjusted. Not so easy if you are dealing with a stranger at a distance. Think this thing about. Ask the fellow who has had trouble.

You, you have heard about the fellow who let a match to see if his tank was empty and found it wasn't. Also the fellow who raced to the crossing to beat the train but didn't; did you hear of your neighbor who bought a new roof from a smooth stranger from the big city, thinking it was better than Mole-Hide, and soon found to his grief that it wasn't? It takes only a little investigation at home to make sure before investing, and it costs no more to buy at home.

A newcomer demands the best from his local dealer for he knows little of it, except for six months or so and it takes him that long to find out. He is heavily dependent on the dealer for advice and adjustment. The place where he can get all of that is the best place to trade.

Though Mole-Hide roofing is beautiful to the eyes of nature, the greatest beauty about it is its dependability. Every bit of it carries a double guarantee. Neither by us nor anyone else but what that means. It won't cost you a cent to know about it.

Your fuel bill must be had to be paid by the one who burns your fuel bills, and one went in finding warmest heat, while the other would not pull in his line when he had a bite.

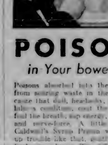
Wrong Idea That Each Day of Week Is "Holy"

It is often said that every day of the week is observed as the Sabbath or set aside as a holy day by some religious sect or people. Such is not the case. Friday is observed as a portion of the Moslem world; Saturday by the Jews, Seventh Day Adventists, Seventh Day Baptists and several other Christian sects; Sunday by the majority of Christians; and Tuesday by the sect of Mazdeans which prevails in Persia. There are no religious or sects at the present time, so far as we have been able to learn, which according to our calendar, observe Monday; Wednesday and Thursday as the Sabbath. Even a large portion of the Mahommedans, particularly those in Turkey, have abandoned Friday in favor of the Christian Sunday. Many years ago some writer made the broad statement that every day in the week is set apart by some people as their Sabbath. He enumerated the lazy days of the peoples as follows: Sunday is observed by most Christians; Monday by the Greeks, Tuesday by the Persians; Wednesday by the Assyrians; Thursday by the Egyptians; Friday by the Mohammedans and Saturday by the Jews. This is a curious imaginedon of fact and fiction. The enumeration is almost, however, the Egyptians, Greeks and Assyrians (whoever they were) have not for many years been known as Mohammedans of one sort or another. Probably the writer, in order to point his point about the "peculiarity of human nature" gathered certain pretense personnes now defunct. At any rate, his assertion about the seventh day Sabbath is correct, some religion is still temporarily regarded as sacred, while as a matter meaning an interesting fact.—Pathfinder Magazine.



POISON

Poisons absorbed into the system from rotting waste in the bowels, cause that dull, headachy, sluggish, ill-at-a condition; and the longer you let the trouble go on, the more serious and serio-fatal it becomes. A little of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin will clear up trouble like that, quickly, harmlessly, in a hurry. The difference it will make in your feelings over night will prove its merit to you.

Dr. Caldwell studied constipation for over fortyseven years. This long experience enabled him to make his prescription just what men, women, old people and children need to make their bowels help themselves. Its natural, mild, thorough action and its pleasant taste commend it to everyone. That's why "Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin," as it is called, is the most popular laxative-drugless pill.

COLORFUL SEVILLE

A Milliner in Seville.

With the exception of a matter of fantasy, Seville, within a few days of starting when visitors from Madrid and most from Cadiz and "The Moor Seaport," City of Spain, a fair and gay city, is the pleasure. It is an industrialization of both. Although through the centuries have seen many changes, the city has built for itself a dazzling place of loquacious, but they are not a high wall enclosing it about. Seville today pride in her glorious past, especially in it becomes. Frankly arrogant about it at times; but her chief love is for and the living of it.

Her broken-covered expanse she hurls heedless. Not one inch must be removed, nor a single crumbling lining of bloodstained stone be removed. But, across a well-paved avenue rise a Moorish-roofed office building, more picturesque every convenience of the modern customer's art.

Ladies' blankets may, and do, wander with shiny through every downtown thoroughfare, but the owner of a pomegranate must keep his eyes open for "that way street" signs and his eyes alert for the traffic officer's whistle.

Seville's history is as colorful as one of Cid Campeador's many plumes. The bloodiness of her darkest moments, as vaulted as the hoods of her people, and surveillance. Today, Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin will clear up trouble like that, quickly, harmlessly, in a hurry. The difference it will make in your feelings over night will prove its merit to you.

Average Income is Puny.

Only in rare instances does the foreigner come to know the true home life of the Sevillano. There is not much money per capita in Seville these days. To its sons, citizens of the city's fascinating but financially wasteful and are in the midst of colossal possibilities for the future, which, for many residents are formed, for supper never makes an elsewhere-always-a-meal. But, such fun, for a stalwart benefits. Forty three-fourths of the town's population lives and has its being and is wholly happy on an income of (round) a dollar a day per person.

If one's cross this income must rest, or the needs of an entire family, and some of Seville's families need quite that—somehow there is always enough left over for the morrow, to afford a few hours each evening with cronies(?) friends in a favorite native shop, and to secure a seat "in the sun" at the Sunday bullfight, and for the numerous collections or purchases passers-by, an occasion demanded from the bowling barkeeper who passes the door each morning, accompanied by a respectful smoking habit with sticky tumultuousness; and for the women of the family to have a new, imitation, turtle-shell comb, a cobweby lace mantilla, and a fabulous pair of arti-artificial—but just because the wearing of silk one year in no money saves another—of Seville's burning, unextinguishing fashion.

The people of Seville blend past and present in their dress and in many of their customs. The high Spanish comb and lace mantilla, of older times are still worn here, perhaps more generally than in any other city of Spain. But the comb is more often worn over powdered pompadour in accordance with present fashion, while the mantilla is a beautiful hand fitted with dedicatory spider-like lacework designed and done in Spain.

The women have long since discarded the silk shawls and flowered dresses of the past in favor of short skirts and simple frocks of Parisian cut, and it is only on feast days and special occasions that one comes forth in the picturesque but cumbersome costume of her forbears.

And the men's traditional dress—the ruffled fat sombrero, short jacket, and close-fitting trousers that are frequently associates with the dashing musicians of Spain—has long since been put in the lofts of bourgeoisie and American styles, although here again a holiday or bullfight, will serve to resurrect an infrequent relic of yesteryear.

Bartality, the people are much in the Moorish manner in southern Spain. Rich brunettes black and brown eyes and complexions ranging from darkest sepia to the most delicate of creamy tinctures are strangely reminiscent of long generations of association and deceit beneath the Sahara sun. Interwinded with this great majority, however, one finds increasingly large percentage of the blue eyes and light hair of more Anglo-Saxon responsibilities.

Olives and Cork.

Seville is to industrious city. Most of the city's activities revolve about the production and shipment of olives and various grades of olive oil. Six ll in the central point of distribution for the richest olive producing area in the world. There is an ancient local saying that the only genuine queen olives produced on earth are those grown within viewing distance of the Giralda tower, the soul and climate of this region being particularly well suited to the full maturing of this class of the fruit.

Much of the rural population found in our modern electrical refrigerators and many of the rare dishes in the annual cups of ginger ale—and other-bottled wares are shipped from the port of Seville. The world's cork supply is also wrought into many articles from that obtained by the 4,000 factories of Andalusia.

Seville's industries, however, are not permitted to interfere too radically with the moments of rest and relaxation. Many coffee shops (and there are scores of them in Seville) in a today flourishing ground. Assembly, chatted, from early in the afternoon until long after midnight. Indeed, one may pass at any time during the day or night and see practically every one of men crowded about cup-cottered tables, talking, talking.

If a bullfight is near at hand, the respective merits of the several fighters on the program are recently discussed and reassembled, always with the best understanding that, no matter how good he may be, no fighter has approach in perfection one Juan Belmonte, Triana in the hill city several years ago, but still regarded by the present generation of bull-fight enthusiasts as the greatest matador of all time. Always they talk, the Sevillanos, the while they nibble bits of dried ham, or spiced olives, or potato chips and sip their steaming coffee.

By E. C. TAYLOR

From Stage Driver to Cabinet

JEREMIAH M. RUSK, who later became governor of Wisconsin and still later was secretary of agriculture of the United States, was a pioneer stage coach driver of the early days in Wisconsin.

Almost a giant in stature, and handy boarded, he was a leading personality in the state even while he was handling the reins behind two or three spans of horses over the bumpy, marshy roads of that new commonwealth.

Tales of his muscular prowess in those early days pack him famous, but his chief claim to fame, otherwise, was that he probably was the only stage coach driver who did not drink. Horses as a rule were mettlesome, hence their managers, and famous for their smashing traction or swearing and cursing. Rusk was the exception of Rusk, all of whom there are any records, drank. A mere sip or glass of whisky or brandy was the best thing they asked for when the coach stopped at the taverns along the route, and in weather, when they dropped off frozen from their high seats where they had been fighting reins and icy temperature for hours, it probably was needed to get their blood circulating again. But Rusk never took a drop, even after a long stretch of driving through the bitterest cold. He was one of the early ardent prohibitionists.

As Rusk's stage coach neared Viroqua one day, a horse fell in. Rusk drew the coach around the animal, and as the coach was lodged, so he that it to the south around the wheelhouse and with his great strength helped to pull the coach into the next town.

Rusk was reticent about his plans and decisions, and was almost fearful when anyone mentioned it, but he often told a story on himself about how he, a bachelor, had to tend drinks for a tavernful of people.

One cold day, he stopped his stage coach at a tavern near Trudeau in Union, Wis., as the passengers might warm themselves.

When they all trooped into the public room Rusk ordered an lemonade looking horn on the counter. The young driver was puzzled in how it. He did. But instead of musical notes, there issued from the horn a spectacle of flour that covered his face. Everybody laughed, and Rusk had to "set them up" for every one in the place.

Rusk began driving a stage coach when he was only sixteen years old. He drove for McNeil, Moore and company, famous stage-coach operators of Cattaraugus, Allegany and Chautauqua counties, and once covered the entire state from Buffalo to Olean, Wis., on the pioneering stage route.

Glancer movement can be envisaged must easily by driving a number of snakes in the ice and a single stake along the land near the glacier. By watching the relative positions of the two kinds of stakes and by measuring the number of ice snakes that pass one given land point each year, the speed of the glacier can be determined.

Yet, while Muir glacier, moving seaward, is an entirely "active" iceberg, large and small, and a daily crop of "growlers," as small ice fragments are known, its ice must have been "running to icebergs" at about comparable rates. Glacier bay was explored by John Muir in 1879.

In 1792, when this part of the Alaskan coast was mapped by the English navigator, Vancouver, Muir Inlet and Muir glacier could not be seen from the sea. Nearly the whole of Glacier bay was then filled with ice. Since the time of Vancouver the retreat of the ice in this part of Glacier bay has been more than 40 miles.

Between 1890 and 1892 there was a slight advance. But in 1899 an earthquake helped the ice once more to face a great deal of territory and another minor recession, which extended across the entire front of Muir glacier, began.

Previous to 1890 Muir glacier was a favorite stopping place of Alaska tourist steamers. Passengers were landed a short distance from the front of the glacier and shortly the glacier would calmge by launching a huge block of its solid bulk through the floating pack ice in front with a resounding crash.

Since the earthquake of 1899 it would be quite a bit to arrive by any such means, for the face of the glacier itself, although of the number of visitors is still considerable.

Parts of the bay pack the glacier has dominated scenery, but are, incidentally, the newest built boat town of Alaska. It is also there is a wharf, monument that of recently formed, scientific expedition is to observe.

FAMOUS GLACIER IN REVERSE MOVE

Scientist Make Plans to Study Effects.

Muir glacier, the chief feeder of Icebergs and ice fragments to itself-looked Inlet(or bay), in the sub-known and one of the most interesting of Alaskan glaciers, says the National Geographic society. It is still a tidewater glacier, that is, it flows over the sea, but rather a broad view of ice fed by tributary streams to many directions, and discharging through the comparatively narrow Muir inlet into Glacier bay.

Glacier bay itself is one of several fjords which gash the coast of Alaska's panhandle, not far from the point where the panhandle is joined to the main part of Alaska. It is perhaps best known to shipping men as the narrows ninety part—the long, inside channel between passage, up which boats can weave a way from Seattle and Vancouver.

From, and to, end Glacier bay stretches 50 miles, and is fed by half a dozen glaciers of enormous size. Muir glacier, second for its dimensions ever John Muir, is the largest. Where it ends Muir glacier spreads across a front of three miles and is from 300 to 400 feet high, although some 700 feet are under water.

Muir glacier is also famous for the change its snout has been, so that the invigorated feels in constantly washed by the waves of the ocean. The fact that valley are occupied by the glacier itself is known as Muir Inlet, a branch of Glacier bay. Muir glacier is quite rich in its fame and scientific attainment from the fact that it is one of the few most of North American glaciers. Various estimates of its speed have been given, some of them as high as 60 feet a day, although 7 to 10 feet a day is generally accepted among scientists as nearer to its true rate.

Glacier movement can be envisaged must easily by driving a number of snakes in the ice and a single stake along the land near the glacier. By watching the relative positions of the two kinds of stakes and by measuring the number of ice snakes that pass one given land point each year, the speed of the glacier can be determined.

SCIENCE BATTLES IMPURITIES TO PREVENT DISEASE

1 DISEASES PICKED UP THROUGH BODILY CONTACT WITH FILTH

2 DISEASES PICKED UP THROUGH FOOD & DRINK

3 DISEASES PICKED UP THROUGH AIR WE BREATHE

Modern Sewage Disposal and Personal Cleanliness Habits have rid the world of that type of plague

Pure Food Laws and Sanitary water supplies have done away with contamination from these sources

CHECK INFECTIONS BY STUDY OF AIR

ONE of the most prolific sources of infection from which man is to remain dangerous of conquering himself, we have long practically controlled in modern civilization. Effective means for protection against the third basic need recently been perfected, according to the National Institute of Ventilation, of Hotmest, Mich. Those sources of disease are the germs and normal dizziness of his environment—filth, with which his mental body comes in contact; the food and fluid he consumes, and the air he breathes.

Such epidemics as the Bubonic Black Death or the Plague of Justinian, from which people died by the millions in medieval times, were caused by disease of filth carried by the fleas of mice and rats. In those early days of history little was known of sanitation, as rodents covering the land, and the disease-carrying fleas flourished. The disease germs there have been carried, owing to the fact that the bodies of people spread rapidly to cause the terrific plagues of those times. When people learned to keep their premises and bodies clean, diseases of this nature disappeared.

In more recent times, with diseases as fatal as cholera and typhoid fever taught mankind the grave menace to the human body in contaminated food and drink. Pure food laws and supervised water supplies have proved effective protection against those sources of infection.

In present times, most diseases result from man's contact with his environment, and the greatest menace is the air he breathes, especially in the air within his home. Unpleasant odors influenza, pneumonia and other respiratory infections are the result. Now science is winning the fight against these air-borne infections by home air conditioning which is the function of the modern warm air heating system. By means of an automatic humidifier, an air propeller unit, thermostatic control, and an air filter, the up-to-date heating plant furnishes to its occupants supply of moistened, clean air in motion at comfortable and healthful temperatures in all weather.

Moisture Conserves Home Values, Says Institute

Home owners are impressed by the increasing results attending the keeping out of flues, cornices, moldings, joints, sashes and other features, especially during the winter heating season. Not only are sagging woodwork and sash cracks in floors completely, but this increased about the inside color of a home.

A most effective way to prevent the destructive results of dryness is by proper woodwork and construction, is by satisfactory moisture the humidity during the heating season, says the National Institute of Ventilation of Hotmest, Mich. Those sources of disease are the germs and normal dizziness of his environment—filth, with which his mental body comes in contact; the food and fluid he consumes, and the air he breathes.

It warm air moisture is added to the air in the home, it becomes capable of carrying more moisture without condensing on cold surfaces in contact therewith. The more moisture the air can carry, the more comfortable it is to breathe, especially in cold weather, when the air is dry. The vapor from from two to three pints per hour. The proper sufficient moisture to keep the structure of seasoned lumber, such floors and furniture from shrinking, cracking and other defects. This the home heating system by adequately supplying the water vapor needed in the air, thereby preventing the damage that results when the air is overheated and too dry.

The greater importance, however, is the fact that a correct higher degree of personal comfort is obtained with moisture temperatures in the home air is comparatively humidified.

Examine Heater Before Installing Oil Burner

Home owners should not install oil burner units in their present coal heating systems with the expectation that the new method of heating will overcome any serious deficiencies that characterized coal heating plant performance, warns the National Institute of Ventilation of Hotmest, Michigan. The heating system should be in A-1 condition else the oil-burner installation will not render the first class service expected of it.

"Matter" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Christian Science Churches on Sunday, September 20.

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up." (II Peter 3:10).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "To all that is quickening and eternal. Mind, this Mind saith, 'Thou shalt surely die,' and elsewhere the Scripture says that dust returns to dust" (p. 277).

WASHINGTON'S CAREER IN FIRST CONGRESS

have been one of moderation. No one appeared to advocate independence. Washington wrote a friend in the British army that its colony wanted independence either collectively or separately, but he assured him that if the ministry continued to "push matters to extremity," bloodshed was inevitable.

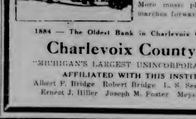
The Congress adjourned October 26. The "Declaration of Rights," had been adopted setting forth the attitude of the Colonists. This declaration, moderate in tone, firmly stated that as the Colonists were not represented in Parliament they were entitled to the free and exclusive power of legislation.

The most important act of the Congress was the adoption of the "Association" by which it was agreed that economic pressure should be brought to bear on England. By this agreement the Colonists bound themselves not to trade with Great Britain either by importation or exportation. It was hoped this would so annoy the English merchants that the ministry would be forced to a change in policy. Although it failed in this it united the colonists more closely in one feeling of mutual dependence, and the Committees of Safety, organized to enforce it, were an important element in the outbreak of the Revolution.

Frank A. Kenyon was a business visitor at Mackinac Island over the week end.

The U. S. tug Cumberland entered this port Wednesday, having in tow a large steel barge heavily laden with sand and other material which was anchored near the government supply station where some repairs and new work is being conducted.

Three addresses have been arranged by the C. H. S. faculty, three to be delivered by Tom Shegill with the opening date Monday, October 5. The speaker is a prominent speaker and an orator of distinction. A more detailed announcement will be given to the public in a few days.



BULLETS AND BANDS

Battles are won by inspiration as much as by bullets. And the military bands that spur business on are economy and optimism.

We are in debt to others every day of our lives, yet how often do we speak of it. It is wonderful how the little spoken word of appreciation helps.

P.T.A. MEETING HELD THURSDAY

RECEPTION AND SOCIAL GATHERING ENJOYED

The September meeting of the Parent-Teacher Association held in the gymnasium last Thursday evening took the form of a reception and social gathering in honor of the teachers.

The affair began with a short program in the course of which patriotic songs were sung. Mrs. Stockton rendered two violin solos with Mrs. Stockton as accompanist. Dr. McMillan gave an address of welcome and Superintendent Bush responded for the teachers.

Mr. A. L. Livingston, the recently elected president of the association, introduced the teachers in a novel manner asking them to stand for a moment as their names were called to give everyone an opportunity to know them and greet them personally later. Every introduction met with enthusiastic applause.

During the social hour the committee served ice cream and cake with the assistance of a group of girls from the domestic science department.

The president invited everyone to join the association stating that the annual dues are 25c a year. A part of the money is sent to the state organization to pay for the monthly bulletin. The regular meeting night is the second Wednesday of each month.

Her maiden name was Martha Maxam. She was born at Lawton, Mich., September 22, 1848, and was united in marriage with George Glazier at Clifford, in 1866, whom she survived by several years, and is survived by four daughters, Mrs. William Hartwell, Charlevoix; Mrs. Letta Bennett, Mrs. Dora Mason and Mrs. Ellen Woodward, Eastport, and four sons, William Glazier, New Buffalo, Mich.; George Glazier, Pontiac; Park Glazier, Kalmazoo, and Fred Glazier of Ellsworth. Other survivors are thirty-two grand children and twenty-two great-grandchildren.

NOVEL ADVERTISING BY PETOSKEY HDWE. STORE

McCabe's Hardware Store at Petoskey, by some liberal and judicious advertising, drew hundreds of persons from that city and many from the surrounding country to their place of business Monday and Tuesday night.

The store was tastefully decorated with branches of autumn leaves, a large amount of goods of interest to hunters, both for small and large game, openly displayed, while an extra force of salesmen were kept busy for several hours, showing the various weapons, clothing, camp equipment, etc.

As an advertisement it was an unqualified success and as an investment was productive of substantial financial worth to the firm.

MOVES TO NEW OFFICES

For the past few days Dr. C. J. Winsor has been engaged in moving his office equipment from the suite of rooms in the Birnhurst block, over the Sally Gift Shop, to new quarters in the Hotel Charlevoix, where a suite of rooms has been specially arranged for him, that makes for the best ward in appearance and convenience.

LOCAL LAD INJURES LEG

Harold Knudson who lives east of his city injured one of his legs while engaged in a friendly scuffle a few days ago. Examination of the member by Dr. R. B. Armstrong revealed that the leg was broken near the ankle. Dr. Armstrong reduced the fracture. The injury was much more serious than was at first supposed and as a result Harold will be out of sporting events for some little time.

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Loewenstein, Jr., have as their guests over the week end Mrs. Loewenstein's mother, Mrs. Rosa Hillman, Petoskey.

Press Correspondent, Mrs. Nowland, Charlevoix.

EPWORTH LEAGUE HOLDS ELECTION OF OFFICERS

The Epworth League of the Methodist Episcopal Church held their annual meeting to elect officers for the coming year after their regular meeting Sunday evening.

The officers elected were as follows:

President, Virginia Taylor.
First Vice-President, Vera Belding
Second Vice-President, Iva Howe.
Third Vice-President, Lucile Bogart.
Secretary and Treasurer, Dorothy Pederson.

Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Hurd, the new pastor and his wife, offered their assistance in anything they could do for the young people at any time. We hope that Charlevoix will cooperate with Mr. and Mrs. Hurd. Mrs. Hurd is an ordained minister and a mighty good one. They last parish was at Clare, Michigan.

Two distinguished Lure County citizens, Congressman Frank P. Bohn, and Sheriff John T. Turnbull, of Newberry were short time Charlevoix visitors last Thursday. They spent a few hours here, during which they called on a few business men. The visit was probably more of a social than political in character, however, it is reasonable to suppose that politics to some extent formed a part of the topics touched upon. Dr. Bohn is now serving his third term as Congressman and as such represents the 11th Michigan district at Washington.

SALLY O'NEIL PERSONIFIES CHARM OF IRISH COLLEEN

Disarmingly frank and indifferent to what people think of her, Sally is so degree, though she confesses she loves to stay in bed of mornings. Individual in all things she doesn't think she'd like elves, so she's never tested one. Five feet two, with the true Irish coloring of black hair and brilliant blue eyes that snap and sparkle. Vivacious, piquant, aggressive and charming.

Sally O'Neil is all of these and more—many more. She drives her airplane roadster like a fiend, and yet she's never had an accident. The daughter of a New Jersey supreme court justice and of a famous opera singer, she received all her education in convents, yet she took to acting like a duck to water. And when she finally got a role that gave full vent to her native wit and audacity—the title part in Fox Films' screen version of "The Brat", which opens tomorrow at the Casino Theatre—she scored such an instantaneous hit that the Fox organization immediately signed her to a long-term contract.

In "The Brat," Miss O'Neil is said to have the most colorful role of her entire career. It is that of a rowdyish, slang speaking flowery gamin who is rescued from the night court by a snobbish and successful novelist. Thinking he can use her as material for his new book, the author takes her to his city. Long liked-ness, and in return for the favor Miss O'Neil supplies him with enough material in the way of romance, entertainment and worry for an entire library.

Allan Dinehart, late of the New York stage makes his talking screen debut in the film in the character of the novelist and shares leading male honors with Frank Carbeno, who was recently seen in "A Connecticut Yankee." William Collier, Sr., Virginia Cherrill and June Collyer are the other featured players.

"The Brat" is the thirty-third production John Ford has directed for Fox films. It was adapted from Maude Fulton's stage play of the same name.

Mr. Nels Tillotson returned home Friday from Ann Arbor where he left his son Clair for ten days observation in the hospital. Mrs. Tillotson remained to be near Clair.

Mr. and Mrs. John Harsha and nephew, Willard Lourie of Detroit, arrived here Sunday and will remain for a week or ten days.

Noted Lecturer Here Monday at Hi-Gym

Tom Skeyhill will be in Charlevoix Monday, October 5th. To those who have heard Mr. Skeyhill in the past this means a great deal. This week at Petoskey Mr. Skeyhill in his lecture "The Last of the Longhunters" is the chief event on the two-day program, the Monday lecture will give the same lecture here in the evening in addition to one in the morning and one in the afternoon. In the morning the subject will be "With Mussolini and the Black Shirts," and in the afternoon "The Writing on the Wall of Russia."

Mr. Skeyhill is an Australian by birth. He was on the British at the attempt to take Constantinople, in which engagement he was blinded for many years. He was in Rome when Mussolini took over the government, with the aid of the Fascisti. He has traveled through Russia disguised as a Swedish Engineer. He has written a Broadway success. He has published poetry, and biography. His characters range from Napoleon to Alvin York of Tennessee. "The Last of the Longhunters," dealt with mountain folk from Daniel Boone to York.

Those who have heard Mr. Skeyhill urge all who possibly can to attend all three of the lectures on Monday night. The price has been placed low enough to enable many to attend. If in doubt about going, ask some of the students who hear the morning speech.

Mr. and Mrs. M. H. Hooker and Mr. Joseph R. Cooper are driving to Flint today where they visit friends over the week end, returning home early next week.

Mrs. Oscar F. Nelson and daughter Joan, for the past few months visitors in Norway, returned via the M. C. R. R. to Gaylord where they were met by Mr. Nelson.

Mr. and Mrs. F. S. Myers accompanied by their daughter, Miss Helen motored to Detroit Wednesday, where they will visit their daughter, Mrs. N. H. Broderick for a few days.

C.H.S. DEFEATS MACELONA HI

WIN SECOND GAME OF SEASON BY SCORE OF 14-0

Charlevoix High School football team completed the second game of the season by giving the Mancelona High School football team a 14-0 beating on the home field.

The game was played under a heavy northeast wind, this making it difficult to pass and punt success fully. Hard rain in the first half made the field quite slippery.

Despite the weather, there was a fine turnout. A very good crowd came from Mancelona.

The two teams were quite evenly matched, both making some long threatening runs. Charlevoix's stone wall defense prevented Mancelona from getting a first down during the first half. The Mancelona crowd felt very confident of a touchdown in the 4th quarter, when for 4 downs mancelona lacked but 2 inches from the goal line. Brasse, Hardy, and Johnson were the outstanding players for Mancelona. Brasse making long runs and Johnson and Hardy tackling and blocking. For Charlevoix Struthers and Averill making the long runs and Parker and Ance making a good job of tackling and blocking. Struthers scored Charlevoix's first touchdown in the third quarter, also made the extra point, the score at the end of the third quarter was 7-0.

At the beginning of the fourth quarter Averill made the second touchdown and Smith making the extra point, thus making the final score 14-0.

Substitutes for the game were Brown for Mancelona, going in in the second quarter and Davenport, Dirk, Walker and Roen going in in the last five minutes of play. Joe Smith, who put the finishing touch to Charlevoix's second touchdown, was injured in the second quarter. He will be off of the team for the remainder of the season. We all sympathize with Joe, and congratulate him for playing the whale-of a game he did in spite of his injury.

Charlevoix will meet East Jordan on the local field next Saturday at 2:30 p. m. Everyone turn out and support your home team next Saturday.

Charlevoix		Mancelona
Navotny	LE	Bingston
Parker	LT	Hardy
McCann	LG	Vinde
Ford	C	Allen
LaBlanc	RG	Foot
Genier	RT	Parker
McSkane	RE	Peterson
Ance	Q	Johnson
Struthers	RH	Buckwheat
Smith	LH	Alexander
Arvilla	FB	Brasse

Umpire for the game was John Ferrens from Michigan State Normal and Referee William Unger from the University of Michigan.

Mrs. S. B. Armstrong attended the thirty-seventh annual meeting of the Michigan State Federation of Women's Clubs held at Muskegon this week. The first session convened on Tuesday with about five hundred delegates in attendance for the two day meeting.

17TH ANNUAL MEET WOMEN'S R. CORPS

The 17th annual convention of the Women's Relief Corps met in Charlevoix for a two day session last Thursday and Friday, and at its closing the several delegates pronounced the session one of the best and most interesting in the history of the 17th district.

There was a good representative gathering from all distant points in the district and this was augmented to some considerable extent by local representation, with the latter serving a dinner at which seventy delegates sat down to, participated.

Mrs. Ethel Wrobel, district president, Mrs. Agnes Ables, department secretary and Mrs. L. Dandy, past department president, delivered addresses to the assemblages and otherwise participated in the program. Comrade Paskett of Petoskey also attended and participated in the proceedings.

Local Baxter Post was complimented on its fine condition and for active work in connection with the convention.

POTATO AND APPLE SHOW CHOIR SINGING CONTEST

The Top O'Michigan Potato and Country Clover and Chorus Singing Contest held in connection with the Ninth Annual Potato and Apple Show at Gaylord, will be given more consideration than usual this year, due to the increasing number of entries each year.

The contest is conducted under the auspices of the R. E. Olds Community Music Fund and the Michigan State College. The two hundred and five dollars in prizes will be awarded as follows: First, $60; second $40; third, $30; fourth, $25; fifth, $20, and the next three $10 each.

During his work here Father Fitzpatrick has won the interest of the society, built up its physical properties by way of improving old buildings and the installation of new, and by his retirement from the parish he leaves behind him a far better appearing as well as more valuable property than when he arrived here some three years ago to assume active charge of the local parish.

He has labored faithfully, consistently and effectively in the upbuilding of properties and work of his parish and his followers and retires with the best wishes from his parishioners for complete success in his future work in new fields.

Viking Ship Anchored In Harbor Tuesday

After a more or less tempestuous voyage the Viking ship "Roald Amundsen" claimed by Captain Gerhard Folger, to be an exact reproduction of the sailing ship used by Leif Ericson when he arrived in this country exactly one thousand years ago, was anchored in Charlevoix harbor Tuesday morning.

The little queer looking ship left her home port in Norway last February, safely crossed the Atlantic, and has been exhibited and boarded by thousands of persons at various points in the country during the past few months, probably with profit to the venturesome owners.

On her trip from Frankfort north the ship encountered heavy weather and went on a rocky reef from which she was released by Captain Fred Marsh and members of his coast guard crew.

The ship attracts wide attention. Her appearance is unique, out of the ordinary and with her f

Poultry

BEST TO "CUT OUT" TUBERCULOUS HENS

Safest Method Is to Raise New Flock.

It is commonly recorded that before tuberculosis gains to the extent in his flock, poor feeding and poor husbandry such as can occur through bad home setting, have set in the chicken yard. Tuberculosis is the inevitable result, at one time or another, of filthy or poorly ventilated houses, poorly kept yards or poor water supplies.

We would, if it is attainable to save a flock, by killing off the tuberculous birds as manifestations appear. Among the first tuberculous affects usually the liver and severe emaciation appears. The disease is communicated by food or water contaminated by droppings of sick birds. Since it is fatal sometimes in a few days, and usually in a few months, from simply taking away the sick birds as they appear, it seems worth while to try to save the flock. Of course, the unfortunate owner will desire the recommendation of a veterinarian, that assures a return of 75 cents an hour for himself when professionally employed. Before employing such assistance, however, in planning a new hen house or in remodeling an old one, there should be given the appropriate forethought date of raising birds.

Many poultry men and home should not be used unless it contains a floor that can be thoroughly cleaned before brooding. This is followed on wiping with a disinfectant, such as a solution of chloride. Concrete floors are usually preferable. Concrete floors are sanitary, if properly constructed and proper care arrangements can be made for drainage. Such a permanent house is possible type of house is preferable. If you can provide in clean ground each year.

Less Barn Feeding

At the meeting this at the Mississippi state Agricultural college, Clarence Dykstra, superintendent of the college farm, stated that whereas the usual practice at the college farm was to feed about six pounds of grain to each three pounds of milk in the last five years the amount has been reduced to 2 pounds grain to 20 in the light breeds. Six tons must be gathered grass dry and 10. Of silage must be stored in a manner are between $2 and $5 dollars production or less. The cost of the latter was several loading tons in connection with intensive pasture.

They Liked Wheat

Illinois farmers fed wheat last year with splendid results, according to H. L. Stuntz, University of Illinois, of the 1,000 hens kept during the year on their home farm. Of these, 23 reported good success, equal to corn and seven used it was as good or better than corn. Feeders can afford to pay the same price for wheat that they would have to pay for corn as the wheat is worth enough more in any for grinding or crackling. Bobbins bullevard.—Victoria Farmer.

Bur Clover

The sanitary value of the fruit of Rock Hill follows especially in a good way to get bur clover established. The use ground mixing a bushel of southern bur clover in the bur with ten bushels of dry stable manure. This is dropped to handfuls 20 inches apart so that the seed and manure fall together preferable on the land. If it auto, another cultivation may be given or it may be left alone and the first good rain will start germination.—Southern Agriculturist.

Cut Out Non-Producers and Save Cost of Feed

According to the poultry department of the New York State College of Agriculture the most economical way to get rid of keeping a non-layer is to sell or use it for meat before the fall molt. Not only the feed but the labor, shelter and interest money on the value of the bird are saved by disposing of it at this time. Poultry keepers who have been carrying over a number of poor layers in the hope that they will do better next winter should remember that the cost of feeding a hen for a year is about $2.50 and that the average flock of 200 hens will produce a net profit of $1,000 if the birds are culled and the poor layers disposed of at the right time.

Sanitation Pays

Sanitary methods in the small poultry unit encourage profitable growth and development, a report of 91 cases to hour more for those under their own from flock owners who did not use sanitation measures, is a summary of those results to it. If this poultry extension specialists of the University of Illinois. He cites this to further emphasize the importance of sanitation in poultry raising in regard to one of the most consistent factors in always part of good management. Floors troubled under the recommendations of specialists that they possess a return of 75 cents an hour for labor while professional assistance would be obtained for February farrowing. In planning a new hog house or remodeling an old one, should be given the appropriate farrowing date of raising litters.

Good Season to Market Farm Grain on the Hoof

This is a season when farmers can profitably market much grain in the form of their crops and can do the work of harvesting and marketing it at the same time by converting the crop of which it is composed into meat.

The man who wishes to get the most out of grain in feed will find it profitable to grind it. Grinding increases the digestibility of the grain, according to experiments made, that a feed grind of middle size is better than fine grind through the latter produces indigestion. Thoroughly ground feeds are a waste of grain. The best way to grind feed is to buy a power mill and grind enough for a few days' feeding at a time

SMALL TOWN ADVANTAGES

Governor Roosevelt in a recent address at Silver Bay, N. Y., declared that our great manufacturing industries ought to consider seriously going into the smaller communities with their plants. He expressed the belief that such a change is now getting under way and this of course will mean the building up of the smaller communities of the country. The decrease in taxes was cited as the chief reason why the factories will seek the smaller communities. Continuing, he said:

"Your great taxes are your community taxes, and they will grow larger as more subways are built, water systems enlarged and the systems of transportation further congested.

"But suppose your smaller industries, instead of inhabiting a large town, moved to a farm community. There those taxes would be smaller. Your employe's dollar would buy milk for 5 cents a quart; and vegetables seven days a week at less than he pays now for a fourth as much. Your employe would be handier and the farmer would have a larger outlet for his produce.

"There are in New York State a good many thousand industries which might well go back to the farm. I do not mean that literally, but rather back to the communities which I have described."

There is much to be said for the plan of taking industries to the small cities and the towns and villages of the country. Means of communication are getting better every day, so that manufacturing can be conducted at country points much better than would have been the case ten years ago. Telegraph and telephone bills might increase but this would be offset many times through lower taxes and lower expenditures for real estate. And there is little doubt that the lot of the workers themselves would be much happier, especially in view of the lower cost of living and greater community spirit in the smaller cities and towns.

DEPRESSION AND MARKET

Ninety per cent of everything produced in the United States is consumed in the United States, yet on the plea that foreign trade has been disrupted — involving after all, only 10 per cent of our production—business generally has decreased 25 and 30 per cent.

Those figures should be pasted above the desk and stared at in amazement. They brand the country as the victim of mob hysteria. At a time when, through the practice of individualism, this country had got a corner on most of the world's automobiles, bathtubs, artists, silk stockings and all that these stand for, the 10 per cent foreign market goes bad and the financiers of distrust grip the internal trade.

What if the whole foreign market was cut off—the whole 10 per cent—which certainly hasn't happened? The result would be troublesome, especially for those few industries which specialize in foreign shipments, such as the lumber industry of the Pacific Northwest; but a 10 per cent reduction of the prosperity of 1928 should not, after all, make any great difference in our national life. That margin could be absorbed, in fact, by the practice of efficiency and the elimination of wastes that crept into the system in the free and easy times. If our own people had been able, psychologically, to ignore foreign trade conditions as they were revealed in the autumn of 1929, the period of deflation would be hardly noticeable at home.

The tragedy is that under the present conditions, with most people who have money hiding in the financial storm cellars, much of the advantage which we won in the days of confidence is being lost to us. We forged ahead of other nations through mass production, mechanical supremacy and the strength given by a sense of destiny. But a rower cannot rest on his oars without those behind catching up. We are still far ahead—what are we waiting for?—Portland Oregonian.

TACKLING THE FARM PROBLEM

As a possible candidate for the presidency, Franklin D. Roosevelt is a man whose views on agriculture are of great importance to the country at large. Even if no such possibility entered into the picture, his forthcoming articles on this subject in The Country Home would still be important to farmers, because he is governor of one of the great farming states of America.

Advance proofs of his article indicate his firm belief that the way to end a trouble if to get at its roots. "One of the heartbreaking spectacles in American agriculture," says Governor Roosevelt, "is the sight of a man and his family struggling with a marginal farm. On land that is too worn-out, too hilly, too rocky, too wet or too dry, or just naturally too thin, thousands of fine human beings are wearing out their strength, their pocketbooks and their health in a hopeless endeavor to extract a decent living. This is squandering human life. Moreover it is often a waste of land that might better be used for a more profitable purpose or lesser cost of disappointment and unrequited toil."

The fundamental asset of every commonwealth is its land. New York is still a great farming state, as well as an industrial and financial state. The last figures available in Washington show New York third among the states in the total value of farm crops. Dairy farming is its main foot, but in addition to that it stands high in many other branches of agriculture, ranking first in many minor crops and in such major crops as potatoes and hay.

Governor Roosevelt, in his forthcoming article to the farmers of the country speaks not as the head of a purely industrial state, but as a farm leader who has given the subject deep and serious thought.

"In the state of New York," he affirms solemnly, "we are beginning to demonstrate that it is an entirely possible ideal to farm only the land that is suitable for farming, and to find other uses for land that is better adapted to other purposes." The success of the New York experiments along this line would be likely to have consequence more far-reaching than apparent on the surface.

IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE

Reports drifting in to various departments in Washington indicate that the people of Winston-Salem are successfully beating the general depression. In fact, business courage plus aggressive advertising of its principal product is making that old North Carolina city stand out like an oasis in the desert in these troublesome times.

Advertising and cigarettes are the weapons of combat that have been so successfully used, the reports show. Winston-Salem is the home of the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company and of Camel cigarettes. When the depression came along, the Reynolds people decided to increase their advertising instead of decreasing it. And their courage has been rewarded, because there have been no layoffs or wage reductions affecting the 12,000 Reynolds employees. In fact, the recent introduction and extensive advertising of the new moisture-proof cellophane wrapper for Camels caused such an increased demand that the Reynolds factories had to put on night shifts.

The result is a happy, prosperous and contented community, when the wage dollars of the workers enjoy an added value because of the depression in other parts of the country. Stores are crowded with buyers. Winston-Salem is one place where visitors seldom hear stories of poor business.

GENE TUNNEY DISILLUSIONED

That observant young man, Gene Tunney, has been disillusioned. He went to Russia, hoping to find there a solution of some of the problems that seemed to be going rather badly in the United States. The idealism of Communism was not there. And the figures for the calendar year 1930 show that our dutiable imports declined only 33 per cent while our imports coming in free declined 41 per cent.

TRAILS WE CROSS

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

By FRANK P. LITSCHERT

Day by day, in every way, the arguments of the free traders to the effect that the Smoot-Hawley tariff has stifled foreign trade and that it is responsible for the depression, are refuted by the facts. For example, figures furnished the other day by the Department of Commerce indicate that Uncle Sam had an unfavorable trade balance in August for the first time since 1926. In other words, the commodities exported during the month were valued at $165,000,000, while our imports totaled $165,000,000. How does this square with the argument of the free traders that our tariff is so high that foreign nations cannot sell to us? A big balance of trade, they have declared, would be fatal to Uncle Sam's foreign commerce. If this is true then the internationalists ought to be satisfied with the figures for August. For even in the months when our exports exceed our imports to a considerable degree there is no such balance able trade balance as the figures would indicate on account of our "invisible exports" which include the money spent by tourists abroad and the money sent to the other continents by aliens in America sending a part of their earnings back to the folks at home.

It is difficult to analyze the significance of the unfavorable trade balance in August due to the fact that the nature of the imports are not at hand. If the greater part of the imports consists of raw materials, it might mean that business is about to take a turn for better in the United States. If they consist mostly of finished goods it would indicate that our tariff does not yet equalize the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad. But at any rate the figures sought to give the free traders a thrill even if the total figures are not as large as we might want them, because an unfavorable trade balance for Uncle Sam is the dream and desire of every internationalist.

Of course most of the argument as to the crippling of our foreign trade by the present tariff is pure nonsense. As everybody knows, or should know, a great percentage of our imports come in duty free. And the figures for the calendar year 1930 show that our dutiable imports declined only 33 per cent while our imports coming in free declined 41 per cent. Now if the new tariff were crippling our trade, wouldn't the commodities on which a tariff is paid decline most? As a matter of fact our imports have fallen off in a considerable degree because our people are no longer, in hard times, buying the luxuries from abroad which they enjoyed in more prosperious times. And our exports have declined because the depression is world-wide and other nations are unable to buy so much from us because of hard times. When times get better in the United States we will buy more luxuries from England, France, and Germany, and will buy more raw materials from South America and the Orient. The way to get better times is certainly not to open our markets to cheap labor competition from Europe when ninety-five per cent of our market is at home.

As a matter of fact, while our foreign trade was declining 24.8 per cent in 1930 over 1929, Australia's foreign trade was falling more than 30 per cent, Brazil's more than 50 per cent, Canada's more than 37 per cent and Japan's, 25.9 per cent. And none of these countries are governed by the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill. It is to be remembered too that the decline is not so great as it appears on the surface. Our foreign trade is estimated in dollar value and not in tonnage. Dollar value of commodities has shrunk a great deal since the peak in 1929 so that the decrease in the actual tonnage of our foreign trade is not so great. This is especially true because of the great fall in prices of many of our chief imports, such as rubber, coffee and silk, and of our chief exports, as cotton.

For example, in 1930 we imported 58.3 per cent less crude rubber in dollar value but only 3.8 per cent in tonnage; 38.5 per cent less silk in dollar value but only 15.3 less in volume; 30.8 per cent less coffee in dollar value and actually 7.9 per cent more in tonnage. We exported 35.6 per cent less cotton in dollar value but only 12.3

Java Youths Selling Dambos Musical Instruments.

INSTALMENT buying has invaded Java, according to United States Consul Jeppe. The Javanese like American-made products. American exports to the island economy amount to more than $10,000,000.

Plantation automobiles, seen with wheels from six to seven feet in diameter are used extensively, and against the American-made motor trucks, and native two-wheeled passenger carts, now the only passenger vehicles in Java cities are being crowded off the streets by shiny, new American-made passenger cars.

The inland roads in almost the size and shape of cities are traversed by a network of good roads and railroads. Within a few days of either of the Java ports is seldom out of reach of a modern hotel, or restaurant, or of the offices of American merchants. A two-or-one engine air Italian, Belgian, Spanish or French automobile for a time, but a portion of the road by travelers is apt to be the pioneer of American road building machinery.

Should a blowout occur on the highway, it is fairly that one of the time stands of American-made tires that are shipped to the island annually would be as readily available as one of the eight makes. And the new tire and tube sales of the century which a short ride before flowed from one of the trees on a vast rubber plantation itself.

The traveler who prefers to see the inland from a train window is rewarded that outdoors and feels tempting for and tasteless, and yet its action is quick. You will never rely on crude methods, once you learn how quickly this method acts.

What Batavia Is Like.

Java visitors see the city consist re-Dutch of the Dutch East Indies. Each one more than 50 square miles inside, known with a population of European and Chinese, and other nationals. The population requires systematic sanitation of the soil.

When the Dutch settled Batavia, the present city was built deep enough above their low for the hydraulic and hydraulic city of Europeans type, closed with certain canals, scattered a broad swampy zone. But as trading and business grew, in the first sounds from gardens and other theories experienced to the silkiest supply, covered them, the settlers eventually found that tropical Java was not a temperate Netherlands.

Europeans Batavia, now on higher ground, is a healthy city, a garden city, perhaps of trees and the metropolis of the island spreading over a wide area. The old town is almost entirely given over to the Javanese, Chinese, Indians, Arabs and Malays, while the wide, new city lies in a section of broad avenues flanked by houses embowered in the cool shade of trees and shrubbery.

The new city has spacious parks made colorful by myriad flowers and the luxuriant growth of the tropics. Near one of the parks rises the imposing façade of the Museum of the Batavian Society of Arts and Sciences with a copper elephant, the gift of the King of Siam in the fourteenth century. Hindu museum has one of the finest ethnological collections of any kind in the Far East, and its public lectures every week among the interested citizens of Chinese and Javanese.

A mile or slightly more than 30 times from Batavia brings the traveler to Weltevreden, the most important suburb in Java. Although the town includes large and bustling crowds in the streets imitate the reverence of the Javanese, commercial importance is in the most part not and presents few attractions.

A few hours' ride from the city's front door, know as Tanjong, the traveler to Passanger where he may get the real flavor of Java's interior, where the dress-less Java's natives in the high-heeled covered wagons dragged over the newly formed streets with buffalos.

Tosari a Pleasant Resort.

Nearby, but another city after hours of swapping, chinning on chinkara and adult, in the delightful resort Tosari. A walk along the village's single street reveals the kinds of life of Javanese mountaineers who are quite different from their neighbors in the lower valleys. Here are the homes of the Tengger, a sturdy tribe which at the time of the Mohammedan invasion of Java retreated to the mountains and successfully defended themselves against the invaders. Tosari is perched on a flank of the Tengger massif 5,840 feet above sea level and with magnificent mountain climbing much more pleasant than in the torrid regions in the Javanese foothills.

Sitting in the midst of the great East Indian volcano region, Java has its share of active and extinct craters. In fact the island of Volcano Mount is estimated that there are more than 100 craters on the island, the lively, where in Java in the high center Mount Semeru rises over 12,000 feet, even in summer months, half hidden when mountain are covered with clouds. Java has a number of inactive volcanoes, but the most famous is Krakatoa, which in 1883 blew out one-half of its former height. Its 1928, security, Mount Merapi, situated at the extreme eastern tip of the island united ever and took the lives of 50 natives.

A volcano is not always considered a calamity in Java. In most of the larger towns and cities of the island units known around the base of active craters, although thousands of inhabitants have been lost in violent eruptions. Much of the prosperity of the island is due to the constant enriching of its soil by material ejected from these great smokestacks, and from the medicinal value of the hot mineral springs and highland resorts along the slopes.

Though travelers make enervating journeys to the crater rims of active volcanoes, Java's most fascinating spots are its city markets. The Dutch have provided many of these with roofs to shut out the piercing rays of the tropical sun. Beneath these roofs native dealers display huge baskets of rice, bunches of bananas, peppers, and greens covered. A small purchase is often wrapped in a banana leaf and fastened with a native thorn before it is handed to a shopper by a merchant.

Why Not?

Guest—Oh, oh, you've been driving in low gear all the way, this rear!

Host—I thought free wheeling did away with that.

STAGE COACH TALES

By E. C. TAYLOR

Henry Clay Rides to a Fall

HENRY CLAY, the "Idol of the West," on whose election to congress more than those of any other man in American public life the building of the great National road was done, took a fall on the road he had followed.

Clay spent traveled over the great highway, on his single journey from from the soldier's neglect to his home in Kentucky, each year and was known and liked in every stage coach office along the route.

One day the brilliant political leader was traveling on his home to Kentucky. The stream of Uniontown Pa., in those days were not the paved thoroughfares of today. They were mud in succession to no smaller, and rocky roads in dry.

The coach in which Clay was riding struck a large number of limestone as it was turning. Uniontown, and overturned, throwing Clay into the street. He was picked up unhurt and sitted in a chair, and presently remarked:

"This is among the first of Kentucky's all the hardships of Pioneer days."

Now Silver the driver, removed a leather nose, and the party returned to the first tavern room, where a meal was served and dinner were prepared.

The "Old Dutch" on the route observers on the National road were called, and all friends of Clay gathered they did not all agree with him politically. One driver was accused of disloyalty to Clay, and a scrap ensued during the Clay-Polk Presidential campaign.

The "Pike Boys" were the political clubs of the day. It was every man's ambition to be the driver of that and that passenger coaches. There probably were more street corner arguments along the great highway in some days over the value of various tolls and other issues than of active politics, although thousands of inhabitants have been lost in violent conflicts. Much of the prosperity of the island is due to the constant enriching of its soil by material ejected from these great smokestacks, and from the medicinal value of the hot mineral springs and highland resorts along the slopes.

Though travelers make enervating journeys to the crater rims of active volcanoes, Java's most fascinating spots are its city markets. WIDE VARIETY IN WOMEN OF WORLD

Alike Only in Tenderness and Charm.

While nation possesses the best all-round wife in a neighbor that would seem to still forth south differences of opinion. Some would agree that the little Frenchwoman with her daffy fingers, interest coiffure in the arts of making and cooking, could not be bettered—and when one has had the good fortune to lunch or sup at her table, and be spent her well kept conversation home books, envy of the noisy chap who is her husband burns high, with a womanly correspondent in the London Daily Mail.

Spanish wives certainly have a natural charm, with their liquid dark eyes, soft voices, and quiet manners, and home is indeed a place in which to be happy in many Spain.

Hospitality is second nature to those women, and the table welcomes any friends a husband may bring at any hour. Those whose pride themselves that there is always "plenty," and a husband may reasonably be himself on the position of "lord and master," which his lovely wife confers him.

Others will argue that Germany is the only country in which to choose a partner for life, since there one finds the particularly amiable women.

Again some say "choose the Italian. If you would find a bird of love," for she is early, loving, bountiful, her tastes to young-ging of herself—attributes in home—devotion—proud of the name you have given her. She is a tender mother to her children, loving, faithful yet inquiring. The fuel will be delicious, even if not so well served as by either her German or French sister—and she will not complain either of her husband's extravagance or buffle. She is passionate, but, and contents herself in the position of just being a clinging vine.

The Swedish women has a glorious physique—strong as a man. She is yet as tender as a child. Her home is exquisitely run and there are the most marvelous foods because she enjoys eating and a keen, fine connoisseur and appreciation while eating good food.

Perhaps Hungary women are the most adaptable of all, and make wonderful wives for companions. They have a quality of soul which is without doubt more attractive even than the physical beauty in which they so often excel.

The Dutch wife has often been quoted as an example of tedious, thankless spotless order and in her gastronomic and utility instinct a cup of "tension," has been described throughout the world—while the Austrian women is a home girl—and as well as the off-and wife, with her gentle, dignity and dwelling power, her sense of balance makes that gay, yet her table and help an element in her Fatherland women whose excellence as cooks cannot diminish the personality.

Austrians women have a natural flair for taking such pleasure in their personal and their home. She has a charming quality. Indeed Penna the City of Vienna says the Schumann's best wives make such natural pleasure and native every hour must and her to remain in debate in the evenings or make up a fund for friends, pulling of golf.

But my women you know like the Belgian women of a matter, of the street, or in our box at the opera. She has a certain dignity—and indeed—which makes her the one type to promise over the long table in a country home.

She has intelligence, poise and natural courage—in his every hour and she is the real strength of the land, for she is the mother of her great race of men's men.

Unknown Animals Still in Unexplored Forests?

Many there are still parts of the world remaining to be explored and they probably contain animals unknown to zoologists is indicated in a communication made to the French Academy of Sciences regarding Madagascar.

In the newly of the great island of Madagascar, there are vast forests which the natives consider as taboo. The French services who went there in search of some formula discovered there the skeletal of the extinct giant lemur, ambaudrol. It is almost 10 inches long, with a tail as long as its body.

In the opinion of zoologists who foresee probably native other unknown animals.

What It Means

Vampire Vic—Holding a litterbug child to your nose like that means you are in love.

Paradox

"Did my position do any good?"

"A wonderful remedy, doctor. I took three spoonfuls and six cough went. I rubbed three spoonfuls into my knee for rheumatism and the rest my head to clean the silver."

Love is blind, but sooner or later recovers its sight. Prepare for that.

Jewelers in Constant Warfare on the Crook

Other species of insects which suffer from poisoning and moths. Grocery supply men probably do not realize that they are constantly in warfare with a few hundred species of insects which are constantly attacking all the United States, are making the operations of grocers and jewelers more difficult and less profitable.

The results from many crooks. For example, there is the flour moths. If the grocer does not watch his supply carefully he will soon have a stock of flour that smells sour or is otherwise unfit for use. Another pest is the cigarette beetle, which is a menace to owners of tobacco and cigarettes.

The jewelers suffer from a false alarm for a real one and sometimes the owner of some of the valuables of the robberies must go with a minute to remove it without being discovered. The amazing energy and resourceful methods of the professional crook is the despair of the police—and so on.

The industry keeps its members busy, however. Service, and protection for conscientious dealers. As a result, the value of jewelry stolen from members during 1930 was kept down to about $111,000, which is surely a remarkable showing.

Just recently the jewelry crooks have turned attempts. They go with the painting to the home of a jeweler, steal a gun in his stop. Upon him to have not said how much he has about whether he intends to leave the rest of any of the valuables, and the contents worry. "That time it was," the jeweler says, "I was glad that I had a good gun and enough shells to meet the emergency."

The criminal can benefit, but not the jeweler. Some of the members of the Jewelers Association of America have also turned sleuths. Expert detectives are employed to run down the criminals.

Travel and Trade in Java

Java Youths Selling Bamboo Musical Instruments.

INSTALLMENT I

Java, according to United States Consul Walter Foran Dornman, is a Dutchman's paradise populated by Asiatics.

American senior prospects Association expects to see many Americans crowd to many Java conventions.

Herpetology, fortune-hunting, and white faces are the seven deadly sins in Java, according to Consul Dornman, and native two-wheeled passenger carts, and the fiery passenger vehicles of Java autos, are going unnoticed off the streets by white, are Americanized pleasure cars.

The island, which is almost the size and shape of Florida, is traversed by a network of good roads and railroads. While first impressions are, the American consul is seldom out of speaker of American products or customs. Accordingly the visitor is not long in the portion of the road he traverses is apt to be the product of American road building machinery.

Should a discourse occur on the highway, in short time one of the three adults of American-made Java cars are shipped to the island assembly would be an exhibit, available on one of the four roads. Also the new Java ship can also count of the number which a short time before Rowed from one of the cities in a vast Pacific port into Java.

The traveler who carries or use the island from a trade wishes to discover that advertising and trade journals without trade words help to use the true meaning of words.

How fashions change which fascinate the a native of silvery brine in the cities of Java—this thing is not spelled wood impossible but facts and those the Ramon of Java and between from American fashions and waterproofs. In spite of the regime, novel Americanisms are evidences.

With more than 700 inhabitants on the square mile, the native must be efficient farmers to feed the population. American fertilizers is the home-ever economy, and when crops matter? Disease. Anecdotal history reveals the necessities to bring them back to a healthful state.

Hotels Are Comfortable.

As a rule the hotels in Java are clean and well designed to meet the needs of a tropical climate. Usually they consist of a main building with guest accommodations and their there is an immediate dining room. Table service, complete in every detail, is enforced by foreigners. One rises in the early to a splendid portions and is brought soon to an array of better-liked Modern. These range from cakes are brought, as each of which is a supply of rice and of the ground herbs of the island. On top of the rice, two broiled fowl, the flavor is disguised by various a variety of vegetables, curries, dried fish, eggs, fowls and meat, the served with piquancy condiments. After each of the dishes are deposited on the rice, the diner's appetite, if he is a curries, usually gets a halt and the remaining half of the eleven varieties of rice "curiosities" are allowed to pass untouched. No wonder the ghost majority of the resident Hollanders have learned to transplant Java into tubs of the Java dandy board.

The morals of the larger Java cities just are often filled with American by families and tourists, have their art social manners where a gay array of gowns ranging from short skirts to the pedal-pushers and fathers are on sale, but there are also sombrero shops in which American resident machinery had a conspicuous part. There, the American male, fashion-plate, business spurs prune, and other automobile accessories are displayed under the rays of American-made electric light bulbs.

Sometimes the scene shifts that take Americans problems to Java return with many native products which, are popular in this country. Many bead coils and cases of baskets are created with goods extracted from the bark of native Java cinchona trees. The rubber lends an item's shoes or the tires on most automobile may contain Java rubber. Perhaps your morning coffee and your afternoon tea originated in a Java coffee or tea plantation, while there is a rare possibility that some of the small quantity of Java sugar imported by the United States may have been used to sweeten those beverages.

American varnish manufacturers use Java copal and damar; mattress and furniture cushion manufacturers import large quantities of Java kapok; and the kitchen cabinet in the modern American home may contain vanilla, pepper spices and chocolate from Java. The soap in the bathroom may contain Java palm oil.

What Batavia Is Like.

Java rivals Samoa the center of the Dutch East Indies. There are many fine modern native dwellings there with a surrounding of flowers and vines and date gardens. The government employs systematic control of the air.

When the Dutch arrived Batavia, the largest city on the island, they brought their love for the hemlock and built their city of European type, closed system on closed which, compare to native sections. But as residents, and architect their by the Dutch touch from materials and other Sources superseded by the always vagues of native styles, the architects eventually learned that tropical Java was not a temperate Netherlands.

European towns are now on higher grounds in a healthy city, a great expanse of trees and the metropolis of the island, spreading over a wide area. The old town is almost entirely given over to the Javanese, Chinese, Indians, Arabs and Moors, while the white man now lives in a section of lovely avenues flanked by fanciful embodiment in the most staple of trees and shrubbery.

The new city has numerous parks made colorful by myriad flowers and the luxurious growth of the Tropics. Near one of the parks rises the imposing Museum of Arts and Sciences, which Society of Arts and Sciences founded in 1778. Here are many exceptional collections of the most curious and well among the learned societies of Europe and America.

A set of eight rooms must be named from Batavia brings the traveler to Buitenzorg, the most important town in Java. Although the most leading city in Java, it is the most interesting because of the presence of the city's commercial importance. It is for its home, park and and remarkable reactions.

A few hours' ride from the city is Mount Salak, home of troops the tractor of Buitenzorg, where he can get the real flavor of Java's denizens where the dark-skins, Java's restless native Sundanese, and Javanese negro mingle over the roads behind sturdy native ponies.

Tosari a Pleasant Resort.

Tosari, but reached only after hours of rumbling, climbing up and down mountainsides in the delightful resort Tosari, is a walk with the cool, simple dress reveals the needs of life of Javanese mountaineers who come suffering from their residences in the lower valleys. Here are the homes of the Tengerese, a hardy tribe which is the finest of the Modern invasion of Java Europeans. The mountaineers and their comfortably dressed themselves against the invasion. Tosari is perched on a peak of the Tengger massif 5,400 feet above sea level where disagreeing so many mountain climbers and is more pleasant than to the torrid regions in the Javanese Buitenzorg.

Silhouetted by the habit of the great Hindu holiday without regard, Java has its share of active and extinct craters. In fact the whole is volcanic-built. It is estimated that there are more than two craters on the island. Every where in Java, in the long central lakes, in flowers that now are river beds, even in native temples, and finished when interrupted by seismic disturbances, are evidences of eruptions of ancient fires. The "mountain-boat," as the natives call it, all the island and 10 years of Pelleo in 1903. More recently, Mount Merapi, situated in the extreme eastern tip of the island boiled over and took the lives of 30 natives.

A volcano is not always considered a calamity in Java. In fact some of the larger towns owe their cities of the island usually around the base of active craters, although closeness of volcanoes have been lost in violent eruptions. Much of the prosperity of the island is due to the marvelous fertility of its soil by nature coupled from those great benefactors, and from the medicinal value of the hot mineral springs and highland resorts dying the year.

Though travelers make enervating journeys to the cooler class of active volcanoes, Java's most fascinating spots are its cool nights. The Dutch have roofed most of them over to shut out the glaring rays of the tropical sun. Beneath these roofs natives display large baskets of rice, bunches of bananas, peppers, and ground nutmeat. A small purchase is often wrapped in a banana leaf and fastened with a native thorn before it is handed to a shopper by a merchant.

Guest—Oh, sir, you've been driving in low gear since you got into one!

STAGE COACH TALES

By E. C. TAYLOR

Henry Clay Rides to a Fall

HENRY CLAY (or "Hen of the Hills"), to whose efforts in connection with Harry Some of any other men in America public life the building of the great National road was due, rode to a fall on the road he had labored.

Clay—since traveled over the great highway, as he made frequent trips from the nation's capital to his home in Louisville each year, and was known and liked by every stage coach driver along the route.

One day the brilliant political leader was traveling back home to Kentucky. The stream of transients, by the way, then were not the placid floor-boarders of today. They were usually merry men in wit, weather and rocky roads in dry.

The result is that when they was riding across a large number of travelers as it was leaving Cumberland, and overturned, throwing Clay into the street. He was picked up unhurt and after showing his sensitivity, remarked:

"This is getting to the Clay of Kentucky with the Sometimes of Tennessee."

Now Sidney, the driver, received a severe scare, and the party returned to the Methodist home, which it had left only a few minutes and dried were proceeded.

The "Old Pike," as the famed thoroughfare on the National road were called, was all through of Clay accidents they had not all gone well with pedestrians, one driver was stunned of deliberately when Bishop of a prelate, and another during the Civil War Presidential campaign.

The "Old Pike" were the aristocracy of the day. Lords all over the country named sons there as the best of today look up to Lindbergh and Byrd as heroes of the air. It was then a sometimes to be the driver of mail coach, or passenger coaches. Horse probably were more street cutters are, pointers along the great highways in years ago, but being a stinging vinegar was over the wide of various farmers' driving and their journeys as they were not always pleasant, but were ever jubilee.

The drivers were as noted for their quick wit and large acquaintance with people as for their dexterity with the ribbons. Their social and business position was the envy of all hostlers, and it was the ambition of the soldier's youths to emulate them. They were accomplished as horses.

Among the best known drivers of the days lately all of whom they knew by their nicknames were John Bunyan, Jim Reynolds, Billy Arnett, "Bent" Dunning, nearly seven feet tall, was the best known in the lands. Darnell Gordon and James Hall were the earliest drivers of the western portions of the stage lines.

These drivers were proud of their horses, and took the best of care of them. The passage of a President was a triumph procession about the National road. The best drivers and the best horses were assigned to them.

The coaches were elaborate affairs, being of the rocking seventh chronicle dashes. They were quite gaudily painted, and fixed with soft, comfortable seats.

The rattling coaches on the National road were the Tony coaches. They were built at Cumberland, Md., and carried 16 passengers. Those were followed by the more elaborate Concords, which were used more extensively by the stage lines all over the United States.

Relays of horses were waiting for the coaches every ten or twelve miles, and those were changed while the coaches were still rocking after coming to an abrupt halt. Speed was the watchword, and not a minute was lost on a trip. The drivers prided themselves on maintaining their schedule in all kinds of weather.

Those who lived along the National road when they were children still vividly recall the dashing sight of a train of coaches, sometimes as many as 15 to a single line, pushing into a relay station, with the drivers blowing their horns, quickly changing horses and speeding off again. It was resistance to them.

Mother's Darlings

Georgie, aged four, and Ernest, aged five, were spending their precious few minutes with mummy before going to bed.

"I does love you!" signed Ernest, contentedly.

"Oh, do you love me, darling?" asked mother.

"Yes, as you love your face."

"But it's not much of a face," said mother.

This was a bit of a puzzler.

"But what do you want it to," said Georgie, after much thought.—London Tit-Bits.

WIDE VARIETY IN WOMEN OF WORLD

Alike Only in Tenderness and Charm.

Which nation produces the true all-round wife is a subject that would seem to call forth much difference of opinion. Some think Japan has the little Frenchwoman with his deft fingers, natives adept in the arts of serving and cooking, would not be seduced—and even one has had the good fortune to touch or sip at her tender side in quest her well-kept accustomed tastes feels, envy of the lucky chap who is her husband turns high, serene a woman correspondent in the London Daily Mail.

Spanish wives certainly have a natural charm, with their fragile dark eyes, soft voices and velvet manners, and home is indeed a place to which to be happy in sunny Spain.

Hospitality is second nature to these women, and the table welcomes any friends a husband may bring at any hour. These wives pride themselves that there is always "plenty and a hundred days' congratulate himself on the position of "good wife" manner," which his lovely wife nonchalantly lets.

Unless will argue that Germany is the only country to which to choose a partner for life, there likely one finds the perfectly capable woman.

Again some say "choose the Italian if you're not fond a life of fireworks, this is self, caring, friendship her fastest to your—gifting of herself—extract the most from the possibilities of the same you have given her. She is a home maker by her existence, and her self-sacrificing ever-ready to help either of her husband's enterprises or habits. She is pitching-bred, and contents herself in the position or just being a stinging vinegar over the wide of various farmers' driving and their journeys as they were not always pleasant, but were ever jubilee.

The Swedish woman has a pleasing physique—strong as a man, she is yet as tender as a child. Her home is exquisitely run, and there are the most marvelous foods because she enjoys eating and a man likes comfort and appreciation while eating good food. Perhaps Russian women are the most adaptable of all, and make wonderful wives in consequence. They have a quality of soul which is without doubt more attractive even than the physical beauty for which they so often excel.

The Dutch wife has often been quoted as an example of tidiness, cleanliness, spotless order, and in her photographic past attire, sending a cup of "aroma," has been described throughout the world—now the Austrian woman is a close greatness as well as an efficient wife, will her home dignity and healthful work, her sense of humor makes the grey, regular times pass easily as compared to her Polish cousin, whose emotional temperament sometimes overwhelms her patiently.

But no woman can beat the English woman as a hostess at the cocoa, or in her all the charm like a certain dignity—an unconscious manner for the rest than to preside over the long table in a country home.

She has intelligence, quick and natural energy—all that either form and she is the real strength of her land, for she is the mother of our great race of men's men.

Unknown Animals Still in Unexplored Forests

That there are still parts of the globe remaining to be explored and that they probably contain animals unknown to zoologists is indicated in a communication made to the London Academy of Sciences regarding Mongolia.

In the north of the great island of Sumatra Alfons Heins are said to have seen the Loh, which is unknown to science. Two French hunters who were followed in other part of these forests discovered traces and remains of the animal, which they believe to be the Loh.

The Loh is said to be a giant of the forest, being as large as a full-grown elephant, but with a longer neck and head. Its color is described as a dark brown.

Natives of Sumatra declare that the Loh is the only country to which to choose a partner for life, there likely one finds the perfectly capable woman.

Jewelers in Constant Warfare on the Crook

Other than the honorable ways for true business and legal competition exists, the profession is always the victim of crooks. Many members of the honorable profession have been driven out of business, and many more are now handling the commodities of precious jewelry from the standpoint of profit and safety.

The crooks have many tricks. For example, there is the "switch." In this the jeweler does not know his customer, he will press a piece of cut glass into his safe press pad or a worthless piece of jewelry in the tray. The crook then requests to see a piece of jewelry, and when it is handed to him, substitutes the worthless piece for the genuine article.

The most modern embellishment is the screen for a real coin and check system, in cases of loss, police and owner of the recover must be paid a reward to redeem it without being questioned. The numbers serve to keep valuable articles into the safe-deposit vault.

The ultimate goal of insurance for thousands of these thefts, also of robberies by outsmarting them, as a result, the value of jewelry stolen from members during 1930 was kept down to about $111,000, which is merely a remarkable showing.

Just recently the jewelry crooks have turned kidnaper. They go after the jeweler and his family, and then with them in order to get him to open the safe, where he is made to open the safe into gets up temporary retirement.

The jeweler, however, is not to be outdone, and he has his methods. Among these are the use of a time lock, and the salesman has definite directions as to what he may show to the client.

In the case of a loss, the jeweler has a complete record of the piece, and the police are notified immediately.

Church on Business Basis

A church on a business basis was started in Long Isle, L. I. Hooper, of Fort Worth, Texas, president of the company adopted this idea when Rev. Smith, the minister, was asked to resign. The directors then went personally and when they were all seated, put their collection plate into and ignite the things to get in harmony.—Kansas News.

Almost any sort of weather may be found within Arizona. Several inches of recent months both the high and low record marks for the hottest States were in Arizona. Fluctuating the temperature temperature in southern Arizona exceeds 100, while the temperature of the northern mountains and plateaus is in the twenties.

School Notes

The Freshmen this year, instead of feeling very young among the upper classmen of the Senior High building, are at the top of the Junior High organization. Rather a change in home room the ninth grade schedule is attained. The revamped schools are Physical Education, Algebra, English and Music, and five subjects may be elected from the following group: Biology, General Science, Ancient History, Latin, Manual Arts and Home Economics. Class officers will be elected soon. The activities and the Freshmen will be under the direction of Mr. Hosier.

The Sophomore Class will be sponsored by Miss Hudson, the Juniors by Miss Anderson and the Seniors by Miss Freeman. The latter have all newly begun the year's work by selling 225 logs easily and coffee at the football games. They count also support from the students and others. Anyone wishing a football game will find a log.

Music

The Musical organizations have begun another enjoyable year of work. Interesting selections have been purchased for the girls' and boys glee clubs and the mixed chorus selected from the latter groups by the music supervisor when they join their numbers to entertain the teachers Thursday evening at the M. E. A. Meeting.

The band made up of a goodly number of Junior and Senior High students has been rehearsing music diligently this week. The first act of marching to and back to their place in the auditorium was tried out and it will march from the school to the football field.

Drama Club

Play Production will be the principal item of study in the Drama Club this year. This phase of dramatic work follows last years basic ground in the theater and the famous people and the elements of drama in the technique. There are about twenty-four members, each of whom is expected in which Charlevoix it is going to be a real actor and not merely a role in a one-act play. It is hoped to have open meetings every three or four weeks at which both one act and full length plays will be presented and to which parents, teachers and students may come for the small fee of ten cents.

Athletics

Next Saturday we play East Jordan in football. East Jordan's team is fast and scrappy. East Jordan winning from Rogers City 19-0 and from Frankfort 20-0. Mr. Fenton, of Traverse City will be referee. East Jordan when playing against Charlevoix always plays her best game of the year and a fast, clean, scrappy game is expected in which Charlevoix will do the breaks. Next week the admission will be adults five, students 25c, children 15c. Everybody come out and support the team, the game will be well worth your money.

P. T. A. Reception

Last Thursday evening the P. T. A. held its reception for the teachers at the gymnasium. Mr Arthur Livingston, president of the organization opened the meeting with a few appropriate words as to the purpose of the meetin. Mrs. Soule and Mrs. Stotler led the group in community singing, after which Mrs. McMillan delivered the address of welcome. Dr. McMillan described vividly the lovely scenery of Charlevoix and the neighboring country, making both old and new teachers feel very happy indeed to be in the midst of Michigan's famous beauty spots. Mr. Bush responded in behalf of the teachers. Mrs. Soule accompanied by Mrs. Stotler played violin solos after which refreshments were served and a social time enjoyed.

Local Teachers Attend Michigan Educational Association Meeting

The first and second of October, Thursday and Friday of this week, the M. E. A. District five in which Charlevoix is situated, will hold their annual meeting in Petoskey. This year Charlevoix has a hundred per cent enrollment of teachers. Superintendent Bush will attend and will have charge of several meetings during the two days. There will be a number of interesting lectures. Most prominent among them is that of Mr. Slosh, America's foremost lecturer at the present time.

The students of the Junior and Senior High are looking forward with much enthusiasm to hearing Mr. Skephill Monday of next week. He will speak in the gymnasium, morning, afternoon and evening. It is not always that educational features come in such a pleasing form as are Mr. Skephill's lectures.

Last Thursday and Friday Superintendent Bush attended the District Superintendent's meeting at Traverse City.

Last Tuesday Dr. F. F. McMillan gave the first of a series of lectures, sponsored by the Extension Department of the University of Michigan. His subject was goitre. Goitre is perhaps the most common disease we have in Michigan. In some communities as many as 70 to 80% being afflicted. The generally accepted cause of goitre is the deficiency of iodine obtainable in the food or water supply. The state has endeavored to correct this deficiency by arrangeing with the manufacturers to place Sarvegs among salted children who subtend salt upon the market. We have seen thus treated with iodine show that this method is effective to preventing nearly all cases of goitre. This salt is on the market in all the groceries at very little added expense, and should be used on the tables of every family in Charlevoix.

Between now and January we will have a number of equally interesting lectures delivered upon different subjects by our local doctors, Wilkinson, Armstrong and Dunn.

SHOWING APPRECIATION

Few things are harder to teach than real appreciation.

We are in debt to others every day of our lives, but how often do we speak of it. It is wonderful how the little spoken word of appreciation helps.

This bank will show its appreciation of your account by the service it gives you.

MOTOR CAR SKIDS ON LOOSE GRAVEL

A motor car owned by Loren Johnston of Detroit, skidded in some loose gravel at Horton Bay Tuesday forenoon, the top of the machine hitting a limb as the car slid off the highway, wrecking the top and to some extent the body of the machine.

Flying glass necessitated a return to Charlevoix, where Dr. Armstrong treated two occupants of the car for cuts received, one a five year old boy, Bennie Johnston, whose lip was cut, and the other, Miss Mary Sweezy, who received a cut on her forehead and a more severe wound on her arm.

Repairs were made to the top the same day and Wednesday the party made the trip to Detroit.

John B. McLarty and son, John A. McLarty, who own and operate a farm of several hundred acres of land, two miles west of Levering, were business visitors here last Saturday. TOP O'MICHIGAN POTATO SHOW

TO BE HELD AT GAYLORD OCT 28TH, 29TH, 30TH

The Pioneer Potato Growers Contest held in connection with the 27TH Annual Top O'Michigan Potato Show at Gaylord October 28, 29 and 30, is attracting unusual attention this year, according to Mr. J. J. Bird, potato specialist at the Michigan State College, who has charge of this contest.

Each of the five district potato shows offers $25 to a state fund to pay the expenses of the state winner on a trip to some potato producing section outside their state. Each of the five district shows puts their winner who competes in the state contest at East Lansing in the farmers week.

In addition to representing the Top O'Michigan district at the state show, the local winner will receive a prize amounting to $25.00.

The contest is based on the production of the harvest, and winner is judged on yield, quality and showmanship.

All yields must be taken under the direct supervision of J. J. Bird.

Dave Reimer of Hanska, Presque Isle County, took the lead and state contest last year and made a trip to Pennsylvania. Reimer, with New York and Niagara Falls late in August.

Mr. Reimer will appear on the program at the Certified Seed Growers Luncheon on Wednesday of the show, and tell some of the experiences of his trip.

FUREBRED RAM TRUCK COMING OCTOBER 14

For the fourth time in as many years plans have been made for the Purebred Ram Truck to again visit Charlevoix County. This affords a real opportunity for our sheep raisers to quickly and at small cost of ram, to raise the points to look for in a proper selection, and to understand sheep type.

The truck will be held at the farm of Bert Lansley, located on the Deer Lake road, three miles south of Boyne City on Wednesday forenoon October 14 at 10 a. m. fast time. The second meeting will be held at the farm of Eli Graham, located on Barnard road and, about four miles south of Charlevoix on Wednesday afternoon, October 14 at 2 p. m. fast time.

The breed and grade of ram used this fall will determine to a large extent the grade of lambs to be marketed next year, and this in itself will have an important bearing on wheather the enterprise of sheep husbandry will show a profit or loss. Prices of rams this fall are much lower than last. In the words you will see rams at the way from $20 and up to $40, so you will have the opportunity of selecting the kind of ram that you can afford.

Remember the ram is half of your flock and for best results use a good ram. Mark down the dates of these Purebred Ram Truck meetings on your calendar and be sure to attend your nearest meeting on Wednesday, October 14.

Yours very truly,
B. C. Mellenkamp,
Co. Agr. Agt.

SAFETY FIRST

Carelessness in the handling of firearms by hunters have commenced taking the toll of human lives, some already reported have been self-inflicted and this, too, by those experienced in the using of guns and know the dangers incident to improper handling of such weapons. Occasionally an accident of a legitimate nature can and does occur, but it is safe to say that fully ninety per cent of the seasonal accidents by shooting are due wholly to carelessness on the part of someone, either by the party handling the gun or some near by onewhose position in the field could be eliminated by a strict compliance with the slogan SAFETY FIRST.

REPAIRS ON M. E. PARSONAGE

FORMER CHARLEVOIX CO. GIRL HONORED

Dave Reimer of Hanska, Presque Isle County, took the lead and state contest last year and made a trip to Pennsylvania. Reimer, with New York and Niagara Falls late in August.

Mr. Reimer will appear on the program at the Certified Seed Growers Luncheon on Wednesday of the show, and tell some of the experiences of his trip.

Virginia Payton began the study of the piano at five years of age but later, in her school years, became interested in the cello, finding success with this instrument after she had acquired a reasonable mastery of it. She had the honor of being first cellist during her years with the high school orchestra, has played continually with the San Diego Symphony and has given much radio work, with outstanding success in her solo recitals in San Diego and elsewhere.

Last year Miss Payton attended the Institute of Musical Art, the well known Frank Damrosch institution in New York City. Outstanding especially since there were work in a double string quartet, under the direction of Albert Stoessel, and participating in the music festival commemorating the late Virgil Gerrald by Dr. Damrosch. A summer of study as the result of attaining a $500 Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge scholarship at Pittsfield, Mass., is the latest good fortune of this talented young cellist. Virginia Payton has a style all her own, is possessed of an astonishing technic and makes a living thing of her work with the instrument. The Chopin Sinata (Largo) was done with admirable breadth and dignity; the Defrenaux Appassionata number, heard around the audience to a high pitch of enthusiasm and brought this young cellist forward in the estimation of everyone present as a musician of superlative gifts, not entirely matured, perhaps, but with the promise of great things for the young artist at an early day in the future. The Sonata in D minor (Saralandri), by Corelli, was another bit of evidence of rare technic; the Serenade for Cello, by Glazounoc, the only composer represented on the evening's program, a lovely melody line in its entirety made lovlier by Virginia's singing tone, and the cellebrated Hungarian Rhapsody of Popper with its tremendous technical demands completed her triumph of the evening. She also was accorded an ovation, which was shared by her accompanist, Miss Wann.

At the closing of her work at Pittsfield, she was given a $25 prize for outstanding work and left for summer vacation at her home in San Diego and will return to her student work in the Institute of Musical Art in New York, in October. She is a former Charlevoix County girl and a niece of Miss Minnie Payton of this city.

The working hours during the production of Paramount's "The Mad Parasite" were at the opposite side of the clock from the ordinary working day.

The cast and crew worked from 9 p. m. to 6 a. m. each day filming exterior scenes. A location covering more than 100 acres near Culver City, California, was leased for the filming of battle scenes for the picture.

A tent city was thrown up on the location with a tent acting as dressing room for each of Evelyn Brent, Lew Ayres, Louise Fazenda, Lilyan Tashman, Maiceline Day, Fritz Ridgeway, Jane Clyde and Elizabeth and Helen Keating.

The girls drove trucks along a mined road. Charges of dynamite were exploded all around them and one truck was intentionally overturned by an explosion beneath it.

Hundreds of lights were used to illuminate the large area and scores of magnesium arcs and bombs were exploded to furnish realistic lighting.

Midnight lunches were served to the fifty families members of the cast and the more than 100 male technicians. With the location only two miles from the Pacific ocean the nights were cold and damp, heavy fog rolling in and being used to "double" for misty gases.

Coffee was served all night, a fresh supply being made every few hours. Sandwiches were kept handy and the players spent their time between scenes in their tents resting, out of the cold, the mist and the rain which added a realistic touch to Flander's fields."

More than two tons of dynamite were exploded in creating battle effects with the feminine players carefully placed so that their charges would appear on the screen without constituting an unreasonable hazard.

Legion To Hold Another Stag Party

Each member of the post is urged to invite as many outside men as possible and furnish tables, cards and score pads, as formerly. Refreshments will be served by an exavarsy cook who has a bad memory for names, but swears he can make up the second or third helping you can probably get away with it in good shape.

Prior to the card party, at 7:30 p. m., there will be a meeting of the legion Auxiliary members at the home of Boyne City and East Jordan posts who are going to co-operate with the Charlevoix auxiliary in welfare work in the county. A number of the business men of these towns have also signified their intention of attending the party.

IMPROVEMENTS BEING MADE IN L. P. ADAMS & SON STORE

Workmen are engaged in making some extensive improvements in the display and salesroom of L. P. Adams and Son. The work commenced will add materially to the appearance of the room as well as making for superior conditions for patrons and those in charge of the store.

New wall cases of the same type and style as the ones recently put in will be added to their already attractive equipment. New linoleum placed on the entire large floor space will form part of the improvements now under way.

Some considerable enlargement has been made by way of removal of partition, to the heretofore large and immensely attractive business place, L. P. has adopted the slogan "The best is none too good," but Our best is none too good."

Ed. Bedford of Frankfort, was a guest of his brother, Harrison Bedford, Wednesday. Today he is making a trip to Sault Ste. Marie where he visits friends for a short time, then returns via Charlevoix to his home.

NORMAL STUDENT DIES HERE TUES.

MISS ELEANOR FREDERICKSON SUCCUMBS TO MENINGITIS

Eleanor Frederickson, 18 years old of Petoskey and a student at the Charlevoix County Normal expired suddenly Tuesday afternoon following an illness of five hours.

Miss Frederickson was in her usual health during the forenoon attending to her studies duties, made no complaint and was supposed to be in perfect physical condition up to the minute she collapsed on the street as she was returning to her afternoon classes.

She was taken to the local hospital by her companions. Dr. R. B. Armstrong was called and a few minutes later pronounced the case as being meningitis. Her death followed about three hours after she was stricken with the malady.

Miss Frederickson was a graduate of Petoskey high school, class of 1931, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Frederickson, who reside on Charlevoix Avenue, Petoskey. She is survived by her parents and a sister, Miss Dora Frederickson.

Private funeral will be held at Petoskey this afternoon, with her pastor, J. N. Booth, officiating.

CHARLEVOIX HIGH MEETS DEFEAT

Supremacy was on the side of East Jordan football players, when they met the C. H. S. team on the local field Saturday afternoon and in connection the element of luck was largely in favor of the visitors. Also conversely with the locals which through costly fumbles at inopportune times contributed to their defeat, the first of the season for the local team.

The game was fast and at times furious. Passes and punts followed rapidly with an occasional spectacular play by some member of each team.

East Jordan scored 6 points in the first quarter and there was no change at the end of the half. In the third quarter East Jordan added 14 to their score and in the last quarter, another 7 points was added to their sheet, making the final score 27-0.

GOVERNMENT AT WORK ON LOCAL CANNEL ENTRANCE

Government work on revetments in both stone and concrete is being carried out on both the north and south side of the channel near the entrance to Charlevoix harbor. Trips and scows are engaged in the work of delivering the necessary material, laborers under the supervision of government officials are engaged in completing an extensive job of work on this local project.

There was a very generous attendance from Charlevoix at the chicken dinner served last Sunday at 4 o'clock at the Indian Mission. Those serving served themselves fine cooks, and served a fine menu.

Attorney Lisle Shanahan was called in Cheboygan Monday on professional business.

CROSSING FINGERS NOT SUPERSTITION MENTAL INSURANCE

Miriam Hopkins denies she is superstitious, but every time she walks down a flight of stairs, a pair of exquisitely dainty fingers may be seen to be crossed.

The blonde Paramount actress fraternized with Clive Brook, Ray Francis and Regis Toomey in "24 Hours", at the Palace Theatre for two days starting Saturday, was working in some sequences of the picturization of that gleaming Louis Bromfield story, when Director Marion Gering noticed the fingercrossing business.

Each time Miss Hopkins entered down stairs, Gering observed the movement, but as it was not caught by the camera, he said nothing until the various long-shots, medium-shots and close-ups were completed.

Then, in nearly six syllables, he asked Miriam what the finger-crossing meant.

"It's like this," explained the tiny Southern girl who was reared in Broadway before becoming a Hollywood sensation in "Fast and Loose", and in "The Smiling Lieutenant" opposite Maurice Chevalier. "When I was in boarding school I appeared in a class play, and while walking down stairs I stumbled and fell head over heels. A couple of years later, just when I was getting started on a stage career in New York, I again fell down stairs and fractured my other ankle. In case there is something to the superstition about things running in threes, I am taking no chances."

When I walk down stairs I instinctively cross my fingers. That reminds me to be extremely careful not to trip. It really is not superstition, but a form of mental insurance."

Mr. and Mrs. D. J. Risinger drove to Wolverine Sunday where they visited Mr. and Mrs. George Aldrich and other friends. When they have not seen in the past thirty-one years. The Charles Dickens Club held its first meeting of the year Monday, at the home of the newly elected president, Mrs. Harold Svendsen. Other officers elected for the ensuing year are Mrs. Isabelle Sloan, Vice-president; Mrs. Nellie Richardson, Secretary-Treasurer; Miss Minnie Layton, Librarian.

Programs for the year were discussed, including plans for two meetings in accordance with events in which are held by the American Tree Association in commemoration of the two-hundredth birthday anniversary of George Washington in 1932.

Following the meeting, delicious refreshments were served by the hostess assisted by Mrs. Richardson.

YOUNG LADIES' CLUB GIVES SURPRISE PARTY

Wednesday members of the Young Ladies Club met at the home of Miss Mary Louise Gallagher where with Miss Gertrude Clark as honor guest, they celebrated the latter's birthday anniversary.

The evening was spent playing bridge the honors being awarded to Miss Beverly Lonkot and Miss Edna Neff.

Following the bridge game delicious refreshments were served and a token of remembrance presented to Miss Clark.

Guests present were: Miss Freda O'Neil, Beverly Lonkot, Catherine Bogart, Dorothy Bensley, Elizabeth Thrasher, Mary Louise Gallagher and Edna Neff.

The party was greatly enjoyed and was planned and carried through to the time of meeting as a surprise for the guest of honor.

Miss Sophia Mainer, teacher in the 4th grade of the local school, was taken to the hospital for treatment Tuesday. Her illness developed suddenly but was not considered as being specially serious.

Mr. Charles B. Munyon last Tuesday, brought to the sentinel office an apple-tree branch cut from a berry bush in his garden, that carried forty large plump ripe berries of the blackcap variety, not of the everbearing variety, making for a second crop from the same plant this season. He reports that the entire plant is heavily loaded with like berries.

FIRE HAZARDS on the FARM

When I came to a farm which appeared to be a suitable subject for this investigation, which, several newspapers had asked me to inspect, I drove into the yard. His way of explanation it should be said that the several reports covering an agricultural section, centered a century of farm property in order to educate the farmer to the hazards and point out possible remedies for them, began to think we, in order to save the lives of life and property from fire and lightning.

The first farm I visited had had finished his lunch, cheerful when I told him whom I wanted. "Oh, he said, I thought you were selling something, but just come, had many canvassing men about the coal I had this fall. "Then you probably noticed a new stove, too, he added. "Yes, I said, the handiness were somewhat lessened by the long pipes." "Yes, he answered. And almost every fall I buy a pipe, but never, anything else. I guess I'm careless. The room, and on the ceiling, was the limit, and on the ceiling, was the limit, and on the ceiling, was the limit

AN ANCIENT GAME IN A NEW FORM

The allies have collected five and a half billions dollars in indemnities since the World War. In addition they have enjoyed the use of various territorial acquisitions which have been of great financial value. Nothing has been raised by taxation in these countries to meet either the principal or interest on obligations to the United States, much of which represent loans made after the armistice; in the case of France it represents only what the United States advanced after the World War was over. The money loaned to the allies was collected in taxes, or will be, from the American people; the loans made with it have been scaled down one half, beside which the United States spent over thirty billion dollars directly, and our past, present and future obligations run to nearly $100,000,000,000, or half our national wealth not many years ago.

An American international banker's idea of sound business is to lend money and sell goods to nations which we have to lend the money so that they may either buy or pay. If it was his own money he was playing with in this way this would give no cause for complaint. But it is money collected all over the country, and shipped abroad for this purpose. The shell game no longer flourishes on the green lots, but it seems to have been in full swing in the New York financial district. The American people are now looking around for the pea that was supposed to be under the thimble, and can't find it. The only sport they have had out of all this has been listening to the pious exhalations of people who say that it is the duty of Uncle Sam to save the whole world though he lose his own hide in the vain endeavor.

AMERICANS DISTRUST CITIES

Walter Lippman, brilliant editor of the New York World in its last days, has been devoting his enforced leisure to a study of popular government in America. He finds that the outstanding failure of Americans in the science of politics is in the way they run their big cities.

"The Government of the cities is the one conspicuous failure of the United States," declares Mr. Lippman in the Woman's Home Companion. "It is archaic in design, unsuited to its purpose, unsatisfactory in its operation, and profligate in spending the tax-payer's money. The underlying tradition of America is antagonistic to cities. We have never governed cities well because we are deeply suspicious of their very existence. We have never in our hearts accepted them and cherished them. We view the city as a kind of dangerous disease."

Nevertheless cities have grown huge. For while American sentiment has frowned upon them, American national policy and practical inventiveness and money-making ability have united to encourage their rapid growth. The tariff has been a great city builder by putting a premium on goods that are produced in cities.

Mr. Lippman comments: "For 150 years, while we have maintained the ideals of rural society, we have been busy creating the most extensive urban society in the world. Less than a quarter of the nation now lives on farms. In the last 10 years every state east of the Mississippi has lost in the number of its farms. In the last 20 years while we have added 47,000,000 to our total population, we have lost 5,000,000 in the number of people living on farms."

The great cultural achievements of the ages have largely centered in cities. Only modern America shuns the glory of the city. Englishmen are proud of London and Frenchmen of Paris. Americans are ashamed and distrustful of all of their cities.

THE COST OF CRIME

In its report on "The Cost of Crime" the Wickersham Commission states that America's crime bill is well in excess of $1,207,000,000 a year. The average per capita cost of crime in 300 cities which were surveyed, was $5.47. The lowest rate recorded was in Gary, Indiana—it was 92 cents. The highest—in Jersey City—was $11.30 a year for each citizen. These facts should make the public wonder if the pleasure of passing new "reform" laws is worth what they cost, not only in actual money, but in security, freedom and a stable society.

As an economy measure the Commission recommends a weeding out of laws, to eliminate unnecessary and expensive local restrictions. There is nothing new in this, but it is well to bring it once more to public attention. If there is one cause responsible for the prevalence of crime, its cost, and the failure of law enforcement, it is the tremendous bulk of unnecessary laws on our statute books.

The average citizen needs few laws to deter him from murder, housebreaking, kidnaping, blackmail and other age-old crimes, while a million laws, in themselves, will not stop the criminal from pursuing these same vocations and using a gun or a blackjack or any other murderous weapon, which he will secure, law or no law.

ROADS VERRSUS DOLES

It is generally believed in America that the only feasible cure for the unemployment problem is to provide jobs—not doles. The experience of England, riddled with debt largely because of its out-of-work pensions has not been missed by thinking citizens of this country.

Stimulated public works on the part of the states is being advocated on all sides. Foremost among such activities is the building of roads. In many cases eighty cents of the road dollar goes to labor, which needs it most, and building materials are extremely cheap at the present time.

As a consequence a number of states are planning intensive road programs for the winter. Few localities have sufficient improved road mileage. We have developed great trunk highways between main centers of population—while, for the most part, five or ten miles away, in farming areas, roads are subject to the vagaries of weather and the seasons.

It may be that more good feeder roads will be a prime factor in alleviating the need for an American dole. And every dollar we spend on them now will produce many dollars in the form of more efficient transport, easier disposal of farm produce and similar benefits.

MORE LAWS, MORE CONTEMPT

"The growing contempt for law is attributable in large measure to a mistaken zeal for more and ever more law," said Governor Ritchie of Maryland a short time ago.

It is refreshing to hear this thought echoed by a high public official. Too few of them are sufficiently candid—or courageous—to do so. But almost all who have studied the crime problem have come to the same conclusion.

We are a nation of law-breakers largely because we are a nation of law-makers. We have abrogated human liberties—and crime has been increasing on a greater scale than in any other supposedly civilized country. We have passed laws which have acted as boomerangs and have in actual practice benefited the criminal class which they were supposed to suppress—such as the various anti-revolver bills in effect in several states.

We cannot shut our eyes to the fact that America is a lawless nation. In almost every great city authorities are all but powerless against the depredations of a well organized, well financed underworld. Simpler and fewer laws, more justice and less litigation, surer punishment for offenders—in that direction lies victory for society in its war against the criminal class.

PRIVATE INITIATIVE EXCELS

There are a great many politicians who seem to believe that the path to high office is made easier by advocating that the government take over this business, or go into competition with that. Whether it be a municipal power plant, a government barge line to haul coal on the Great Lakes, or a government owned railroad, the principle behind the move is the same. And they think that the hard times of the last two years have caused the public to take a changed attitude in regard to government and business.

It is difficult to believe that the people will adopt socialism as a solution to transient economic maladies. The spectacle of debt-ridden Australia, with its high taxes, its serious unemployment situation and its industrial stagnation should serve to show what socialism, when carried far enough, accomplishes. The American public has seen the principle of private initiative give us the highest wage and living standards in the world—a standard which, for the most part, has been pretty well maintained even during the present trying period. And the chance—given a fair chance—will pull us through again and bring us eventually to new and unscaled heights of progress and prosperity.

TRAILS WE CROSS

A HAVEN FOR AGES PAST

The work of devoted hands in ages past, San Xavier Mission near Tucson, Arizona will not fail to bring the traveler to a full stop in reverent awe for the spirit of sacrifice shown by the padres in the erection of this still beautiful mission. It was founded almost a hundred years before the Declaration of Independence was signed at Philadelphia.

RAIL EFFICIENCY

In the course of its consideration of the railroads' application for a 15 per cent increase in freight rates, the Interstate Commerce Commission is to investigate standards of efficiency within the industry.

What the Commission will find remains to be seen. But, as a railroad executive recently said: "The statement will, I am sure, remain unchallenged that, regardless of all shortcomings which may be pointed out, there are no more efficiently operated railroad systems in existence than in the United States."

The American railroads have led the world, not only in improving service, but in providing service at low rates. Car shortages have been outlawed, train loadings and speeds have been increased; new territory has been developed; schedules of operation have been adhered to more exactly; the safety of both passengers and employes has been advanced. All this and more has been done while, at the same time, cost of operation has been lowered. The present difficulty arises from the fact that receipts have gone down even faster than have operating costs, and taxes have steadily risen.

The railroads, through their purchases, are of vast aid in building general business prosperity. This year their purchases of supplies have been more than 25 per cent below the equivalent period last year, because of lowered earnings. The financial plight of the lines is of the very gravest importance to us all—a fact that should not be clouded by charges and counter-charges, and arguments over technicalities of regulation and rate making.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

ENGLAND DOLED INTO A HOLE

By George B. Lockwood

In 1892-94-95 we had more people out of work in this country in proportion to the number of employed in industry than we have today. This was in the days of sturdy old Grover Cleveland. No one proposed the establishment of the dole in this country at that time, and if any politician had done so, we can well imagine what President Cleveland would have said about it. In fact he did express himself vigorously even when it was only proposed to buy seed for distressed farmers; he declared this was a laudable purpose but a vicious precedent.

Again in the winter of 1913-14 we had a very serious unemployment condition in the United States. It was stated that there were 350,000 unemployed men in Chicago alone during that winter. Nothing was heard then about a dole, or to the winter of 1920- to 1921, when according to Mr. Gompers there were 5,000,000 men out of work in this country, we heard nothing from Hon. Joseph Shouse demanding the administration immediately take care of the jobless, or from Senator LaFollette the other about the necessity of putting all unemployed persons on a federal pension.

It will be recalled, too, that in those emergencies, we had nothing to correspond with the present great relief agencies which took care of the situation last winter and will take care of it again this winter. A long house responded the limit of relief activity. Now it is only in the state of Pennsylvania where, according to the rich Governor Pinchot, an immensely wealthy commonwealth will permit its own people to starve and freeze to death unless Uncle Sam steps in and takes care of the situation. The Pennsylvanians have a situation for being a bit "tight," but no one suspected until Governor Pinchot told it that they were as selfish and sordid as Mr. Pinchot would now have us believe.

England has made a mess of a condition of unemployment, chiefly created by the senseless determination of the British government to stick to the policy of letting its own markets be taken over and its own employment be destroyed, by opening the doors without tariff to the output of the cheaper labor producing centers which had risen in Europe and the Orient. Rather than give the workers of England a job by protecting their own industries, the British government adopted the dole as a means of buying the "labor" vote. This system has proved to be the worst curse ever visited on England. The British government is well night bankrupt, and the question arises as to where the money to feed the idle is coming from. Efficiency and inefficiency have been promoted; ambition has been killed among hundreds of thousands of people; England has become one gigantic poorhouse with the keeper running out of cash to pay bills, and unable to put an end to this stupid system.

Everett C. Watkins, Washington correspondent, quotes Dr. W. S. Atheam, new president of Butler University, Indianapolis, on the British situation. Dr. Athearn has just returned from England. He declares that America knows nothing of the sort of poverty that prevails in England, and that one has but to spend a short time there to know how fortunate, comparatively, we are. As industrious British workmen told President Athearn that he worked five days a week, and that his pay for two of the five days was his share of the taxes which provided the dole for neighbors, many of whom had lost the desire to work, along with their independence and self respect, and had become liabilities rather than assets to themselves and others.

"We must not kill thrift and industry with a dole," says Dr. Athearn. "We must work for our government rather than work our government. Surely we should profit by Great Britain's distressing mistake."

DISARMING BY BUDGET

James G. MacDonald, chairman of the Foreign Policy Association, according to the New York Times, declares that further disarmament in the world depends on the acceptance by the United States of the principle of budgetry limitation of armaments. In short, limitation of armament is to depend not on the number of guns and the amount of armament, but on the money which is spent in feeding, clothing and caring for the men, and the amount which the armament costs.

This is a clever scheme, propounded by Europeans to put Uncle Sam in the hole again. Under this system a country like Soviet Russia, where costs are fixed by the state and the standard of living is of the lowest, would have a big advantage over the United States, which has a high standard of living. Under such a system the less a nation fed its soldiers, and to the construction of piers and in this spring again congregate for the purpose of placing them. Pine River would be prepared for dredging. And we contend that, by a proper effort on the part of our leading men, such unity could be secured, and the work accomplished. What is not worth laboring for is not worth having and who are more interested in this matter than the farmers of Pine Lake? What sane man will deny that its actual benefit to him will more than double the first year the labor expended? Let this "Charlevoix Harbor and Improvement Complex" be thrown to the dogs, as a corporation which has wrought more detriment than improvement—which could not pay its printers bill of $4.50 if it was required of them and let a mass convention be called. Let two or more men who are interested be appointed as superintendents. Then let one or more days be set apart when the people in the vicinity of Pine Lake and the Arm shall be organized into gangs, each gang to construct a rrib, and at a proper time let these cribs be taken to the mouth of Pine River and sunk. The piers can do the sand and feel it. When this much is done, the dredging will follow from some source, we are confident. We think our unity hope now lies in a united movement on our part, that the state and federal government may see that we are in earnest, and help will come. And help in the name of common sense! cannot the people wake up to their own interests, when so slight an effort, for the doing of which will result in such lasting and growing benefits to them? Therefore let us unite on this issue. The matter which is now in the hands of Charlevoix county. If the sister townships will look to their general interest, great will be the result.

A Bubble, too, has recently been in communication from Commissioner Hazlitt stating that the State Board of Control have set aside the appropriation of sixteen sections of land made by the Legislature last winter for the improvement of the Grand Traverse and Pine River. WE VISIT THE NEW AIRSHIP "AKRON"

It's a far cry, from the humdrum affairs of a small Missouri town in the foothills of the Ozarks to the grand decks of the Goodyear airwraft dock at Akron, Ohio.

It was on the afternoon of Sunday, August 20th, 1931, sometime between 2 and 3 o'clock, that we carefully picked our way through the wide open gate in the high wire fence that surrounds the Goodyear airdock.

Without any molestation we walked across the field and entered the huge building. Inside we found a veritable beehive of activity. Workmen were busily engaged in all parts of the huge structure. Some were working on the rear fin, others were busy on the bottom of the ship, while still others were working on the top of the ship.

Here it was the size of the policeman. Oh yes, that we have observed these congenial gentlemen before, there can be no question of a doubt. But never in my whole life, have I ever been anywhere, where they were in altogether for giants.

We swung into the crowd, down the hill to the hangar. On either side of us were huge ships, and as we entered the doors, were numerous souvenir venders.

Arranged about on the ground was squadron after squadron of tiny fabric-covered celluloid miniature aircraft in various battle formations, their propellers turning over in the wind. We were moving along slowly through the loitering crowd, when all at once we heard the excited screeches of a small child. We turned our heads in time to see a little chubby hand thrust upward and grab at a pice of broken string. A miniature Graf Zeppelin, with a passenger or pulled a nose-rap or something and was fighting out for Friedrichshafen.

Elbowing our way on through the crowd we halted at the ponderous doors. A solid line of human beings some 20 or 30 feet wide, were pouring through, and as many as a half dozen stalwart policemen were turning them right and left for cameras. It was forbidden strictly, they told us, to approach the interior with a camera. To the left they would show you a booth, where you might check them. Pressing on we came up with a policeman. A big hand like a ham shot out, and a husky voice said "What's this? Is that a camera?" My brother was carrying a pair of large binoculars. "No" he said, "it's not a camera, but a pair of binoculars." He squinted up one eye and said "What! Binoculars! They look mighty big." I chimed in and said "Open that up Steve, and let him see 'em. He's a regular old Missourian."

A broad smile lit up his face, and I thought I caught a peculiar twinkle in his eye, as he waved us on into the interior of the hangar.

And now we are walking up under the nose of the great airship. Two pair of eyes now, are really beginning to work very quick and fast. We stood there a few moments, and then shifted over a little. All at once dimensions began to climb, and expand. Men working along the top and side were suddenly dwarfed like so many flies. A veil of thin blue air had enveloped the upper regions of the whole inside of the ponderous structure. We stood still a moment with what amounted to absolutely unadulterated awe. It was just too big, for us to get it. I don't know whether or to believe Ripley's statement in "Believe it or Not" in the Kansas City Star, "that it can't's own clouds and actually rains," but from what we could see, there seems to be plenty of room up there for most anything. Eight and a half acres under a single roof, around 200 feet high is a tremendous building. We shifted our position somewhat, and now moved down about midway on the side.

Underneath near the forward control cabin, men worked at some kind of plumbing. High up near the compass men were working on a door. On the outside on the great envelope, on a ladder some 80 odd feet high, mounted on a truck, a lone man leaning back against a sort of steel ring, was applying by hand some kind of aluminum paint. Six hundred feet away, back in the lower fin, men moved about and toasted far out from the small pewter shaped windows, like so many curious insects. At first they might be posing for the benefit of the crowd.

Far up overhead a small caged elevator took off, and slowly moved along the slender girders, down the curved sides of the great dome shaped roof to the ground. They were and we were told, to convey workmen back and forth to the high catwalks. A mighty clever piece of work to enable these aeronauts. But to my mind and to many others probably, one of the most amazing things of the whole program is the matter of attention to detail. The thoroughness with which the construction was being done.

Talk about building machinery, a skyscraper, or a watch. The thinking has already been done. Thinking about anything, even about the matter of general information. In our efforts to secure data we came across some very interesting facts. For instance it is said that the Goodyear people in their balloon room while other things were being done, designed an outer covering for the airship, some never screw in size. Also we find that they used some thirty-five miles of a special rust-proof wire, and an equal amount of bumpon rope. Some fun a special purpose as that the main landing posts to breathe. It seems remarkable what sense of them fellows with a good sharp pencil can figure out, most particularly when they have a little something extraordinary to work on.

They tell us there is room for one on football games to be going on in there all at once. Six miles of steam and railroad tracks could be laid in there and a hundred thousand people could find comfortable standing room.

The great airplane carriers "Lexington" and "Saratoga" could be housed with plenty of room. Also the Woolworth building and the Washington monument could be laid side by side and still have a few inches to spare. At any rate she is a tremendous building.

And now we are up near the front doors again, looking over the great piles of helium gas tanks, that are stored in there along the side of the building. There is seems too much to it. There is no way in the world we know of, to tell how much there

VITAMINS AND VAPOR INVISIBLE HEALTH PROTECTORS

VITAMINS CAN NOT BE SEEN IN FOOD — NOR CAN VAPOR BE SEEN IN AIR

Without a maximum supply of Vitamins human's do not grow and develop normally

Without an adequate amount of moisture in the air, no living thing can grow to their proper perfection

HOLLAND INSTITUTE OF THERMOLOGY

VAPOR IN HOME PROTECTS HEALTH

Epidemics of Winter Ailments Laid to Dearth of Moisture Indoors.

SO IMPORTANT are the vitamins in human development, health and happiness that they have become known as life's invisible protectors. Without an ample supply of the various vitamins, foods would be unable to meet the body's requirements. Among the common ailments which result from lack of vitamins are rickets, eye diseases, stunted growth, indigestion, worry, heart disease and sterility. Medical science has proved that various of the vitamins are essential in disease-prevention and also to the cure of disease.

Equally important to life is another invisible protector—an adequate supply of humidity (water vapor) in the air. Without air moistures, landlife could not long exist. Even in arid regions, points out the Holland Institute of Thermology, Holland, Mich., the air contains a fair percentage of moisture. In fact, says the Institute, there is more moisture in the air than in the air in most American homes during the heating season.

The dearth of moisture in home air during winter is chiefly caused by the drying out of furniture and interior woodwork, by the inability of homes constructed to keep plaster from any length of time. And continues the Institute, it is wholly responsible for the epidemics of colds and other respiratory diseases that afflict the average public every fall and winter.

Because these diseases become epidemic in the communities and the progress of the heating season, health authorities and air-conditioning experts are of the opinion that the excessively dry air in American homes and places of work is a contributing factor of no mean importance. They point out that lack of sufficient atmospheric moisture dries out and causes irritation of the delicate membranes of the respiratory organs, giving disease germs full opportunity to cause infection. The result is illness from such common afflictions as colds, influenza, pneumonia, sinus infections, bronchitis and other winter ailments.

An ample supply of water vapor in the home air during winter is now economically and automatically supplied by heating systems of the vapor feed type. These are equipped with a humidifier which has capacity for injecting into the home air the vapor from 25 gallons of water per day. This amount may be required, however, only in large residences. In modest homes of five or six rooms, the evaporation of only six to eight gallons of water per day is necessary. This will prove ample to preserve health, and make home-heating more comfortable at moderate temperatures.

HUMIDIFIED HOME AIR KEEPS PIANO IN TUNE

Adequate humidification of the home atmosphere during the winter heating season is a material aid in maintaining the tonal qualities of fine pianos and other musical instruments, according to the Holland Institute of Thermology, Holland, Mich.

In hard woods humidities wood absorbs moisture and swells. In high temperatures and low humidities wood contracts because of evaporation of its moisture content. And regardless of quality or workmanship, the wood structure of a piano is highly sensitive to variations in temperature and humidity.

This is especially true of the sounding board which is merely a thin sheet of wood averaging three-eighths inch thickness. When the sounding board absorbs moisture it expands causing a tightening of the strings. During the heating season indoor dry air draws moisture from the sounding board with the result that, it contracts, loosening the tension of the strings with resultant drop in pitch.

The moisture supplied the home air during winter by heating systems of the vapor-air type is sufficient to prevent serious drying out of pianos, thus helping to preserve the strings in proper pitch.

WOOD WISDOM
If you buy home materials of house and there is anything wrong, you can get hold of the contractor, and if he owns and got things satisfactorily. But when you are dealing with a stranger at a distance, you are likely to be almost sure the fellow who has had trouble.

If you know you are right and admit you are wrong—you are sure.

Can you have heard about the fellow who in a match to see if his tank was empty and found it wasn't; also the fellow who raced to the morning to beat the train, and didn't; but you hear of your neighbor who bought a new roof from a smooth stranger from the big city, thinking it was better than Mike-Hafle, and soon found to his great woe that it wasn't. It takes only a little investigation at home to make sure.

Resented What Seemed Slur on "Profession"

When a motion picture happens to center on some particular profession, a certain Los Angeles exhibitor takes it a point to give special performances for those to whom the picture might be of especial interest. The doctors of the city were his guests at the showing of "Doctors' Wives" and the newspaper people when "Front Page" was locked.

One day this manager was sitting in his office when two rough looking men accosted the attendant aside and confronted him.

"Listen, fellah, what's the big idea?" one of them wanted to know. "Every time you get a picture about some idiot of a profession, you invite those people to see it free."

"Well, what's wrong with that?"

"Ain't nothing wrong with it. But in the last two months you've shown four gangster films and not a single movie in which is set an easily found saloon."—Los Angeles Times

When TEETHING makes HIM FUSSY

One of the most important things you can do to make a teething baby comfortable is to see that little bowels do their work of carrying off waste matter promptly and regularly. For this nothing is better than Castoria, a pure vegetable preparation especially made for babies and at least, have been suggested by the fight on rats. One of the major allies on the non-rat battlefront is sinker.

"One of nature's chief industrial allies is its willingness to mix with other metals, although it is also at home in its pure state," says a bulletin from the National Geographic society.

"It readily associates with several hundred metals and sensitive alloys, lengthening the universe, increasing their best workmanship and improving their non-corrosive qualities. It also is used as a polisher of many metals.

"Nickel and products of nickel are ordinary are seldom out of reach of man's fingertips. In stomach toners there may be found in minor articles ranging from kitchen cooks to floor lamps, stove thermometers, electric irons, automobile radiators and the metal ring surrounding the camera lens of the photographer's camera. Nickel also is used in the manufacture of automobiles, electric trains, ocean liners, railroad cars and the metal that is hidden beneath bathtub enamel. Silver plated ware consists of nickel alloy covered with a film of silver.

"In city streets huge nickel alloy thumb tacks flank pedestrian lanes, nickel alloy building fixtures and tile, nickel alloy overhead, while nickel pennies contribute their 'mite' each month after landing safe in cash registers, conveniences, cleaner and to speed transactions.

"Because of its combining effects on ferrous metals, nickel forms noble treated steels. Firearms and steel, are parts of many automobiles contain nickel. Over all the bright parts of automobiles were nickel plated. Chromium has taken the place of nickel plate but nickel is often hidden beneath chromium plating.

"Many modern automobiles are equipped with nickel alloy headlights and fittings because the metal resists salt water corrosion.

"While gold is white bottom nickel (15 per cent) is mixed with ordinary gold. A lesser amount of nickel makes a fine colored gold while a still lesser amount makes green gold. Green, 'silver' is a mixture of brass whitened with nickel.

"The American 'nickel' is one-fourth nickel. The other three-fourths is copper.

"No one knows how long nickel has been in use. It is well known that the ancients shaped swords from meteorites which contained the metal. During the early part of the last century deposits were found in New Caledonia but no one knew what to do with the metal. Attempts to pass it off to outside neighbors were so difficult that metallurgists called it 'Old Nick,' a corruption for something stubborn. From 'Old Nick' came the name nickel.

"Nickel was discovered in Canada in 1856 when a surveyor's compass was deflected. Old Bedrock as little was known about the metal, the find remained only a curiosity in a surveyor's notebook until 1888 when a railroad was put through the Sudbury region. Sheets started each of strange ferrous ore. Analyzed the rock was discovered to contain nickel and copper. Copper was then more valuable so the ore was mined for that metal. Not until several years later was nickel profitably mined and refined. Today 90 per cent of the world's nickel supply is mined in the neighborhood of the original Canadian area of discovery."

Within less than a generation the refining industry has changed the features of grazing regions of Alaska from nomad hunters to settled groups, new oil fields.

When FOOD SOURS

ABOUT two hours after eating a sour, acid stomach suffer from sour stomachs. They call it indigestion. It means that the stomach nerves have been over-stimulated. There is excess acid. The way to correct it is with an alkali, which neutralizes many times its volume in acid.

The right way is Phillips Milk of Magnesia—just a teaspoonful dose in water. It is pleasant, efficient and harmless. Usually turns almost instantly. It is the approved method. You will never use another when you know.

Be sure to get the genuine Phillips Milk of Magnesia prescribed by physicians for correcting excess acidity. 25c and 50c a bottle—any druggist.

Will Excavate Forest

A forest of petrified trees in Yellowstone National park will be excavated by a group of men from the Milwaukee Public museum. The work will be done at the request of the federal government and is sponsored by the national park service. R. S. Barrett, museum director, said the Yellowstone forest of stone is unusual because so many of the trees are upright. The national park service will build a road in the excavation district and open it to tourist traffic.

"What are you eating, comrade?' 'Soup,' said the other militant. 'Are you deaf?'"

SAVING TIME

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

"It isn't the money one makes that counts," the proverb says, "but what one saves."

I am not so sure that the proverbist hadna wife referreference to time. It isn't the time one saves that really matters. It is what one does with it.

Foreigners are amused at the number and the complication characters of our time saving devices which run from automatic telephones that announce the bells girl to electric washing machines which make doing the family washing a brief morning delight.

We Americans do with all the time they save" some one asked me not long ago. It is a question the answer to which is not an easily found.

The Gallups have surveyed their leisure pursuits and put in gist. It took so much time shooting golf and taking out autos and cleaning up the dirt which the auto and golf brought, that Mrs. Gallup was kept busy all day and does not finish. The new bowling apparatus is prominent, you know. All you have to do is the ball when the pins have all come down unexpectedly, is to light the gong, turn on the gas and there you are. Mr. Gallup is at work on contraptions of a boating nature when he can get away from care of the rest. That is, maybe it does.

Mrs. Gallup does not find that she has a great deal more time than she previously had. The clock which controls the thermostat has to be wound, and there are certain residential duties which have to be looked after, and then she is afraid of an overstuffed fur that something will happen to the refrigerating machine and the ice will all melt away, or she runs up and down the stairs often to look things over without an effort as we did when she was shovelling coal, and she doesn't find that she has any more real leisure than she ever had before.

I have never been sure we benefited that the time we are supposed to save by the use of the telephone is any more than offset by the time that is wasted by that same device.

I am afraid we waste as much time keeping time-saving devices in order as we save.

New Texas Oil Field Is Largest in America

Effect on Industry Is Not Yet Fully Realized.

Dallas, Texas.—The new East Texas oil field is so vast that any of the better pools in the United States could be superimposed upon it.

A study of the geology and economic importance of the field reveals that its dimensions are the combined results of drilling, and its effect upon the industry have not yet taken root in the most experienced and farsighted oil men.

A map of the field shows that the Lathrop pool is no longer first in Dallas point of view. Mexico, nevertheless, centers of tremendous proportions could be tucked into it, with plenty of room left over for the Oklahoma City and Seminole pools.

The long narrow field mentioned thus frankly field would include its limits from the upper reaches of the Jones pool of Hood county and extend through the Kilgore pool into Rusk county. There would be plenty of room left to move away the Yates and Henderson pools of west Texas.

Geologists have declared that this phenomenon of producing wells from south even to those of years ago, was a huge sea. The sands underlying the territory left by the sea are unusually thick, and the result is the formation of billions of dollars of mineral.

It is the limits of these sandbars, lying at an approximate depth of 3,000 feet, that have formed this oil.

Oil comes from what geologists know as Woodbine sands, in this particular field. The first deep tests showed success at various and some depth in all parts of the field but concentrated in a large measure in the southeastern exploration, as drilling crews are thus conspicuously busy.

The thickness of the Woodbine sand varies from a few feet on the eastern side of the field to 60 or 70 feet about two miles west of the eastern limit of the field to the Lathrop pool.

Nickel an Ally in Battle on Rust

Its Non-Corrosive Qualities Make It Valuable.

Washington.—Industry is supplying a number of metals and alloys in the chemists' war on the waste of rust. Chromium, copper, nickel and other copper alloys, and aluminum are substances which the industrial chemist, at least, have been augmented by the fight on rust. One of the major allies on the non-rust battlefront is nickel.

Giant Memorial to Be Completed in 1935

Lisbon, Portugal.—Work is proceeding on the colossal statue of the Marquis of Pombal, the dominating political figure of the Eighteenth century, which will be erected on the Rotunda square at the end of Liberty avenue. It is calculated that it will be completed in 1935.

The main part of the monument, on which work is now proceeding, shows the marquis and a lion. It is in bronze and was designed by the sculptor Francisco Franco shortly before his death. Nine meters in height, it will weigh 32 tons, and the bronze for it will be obtained by melting down 15 cannon. The head of the marquis will be one meter eighty centimeters, and inside his shoe there will be room for a man to lie down. To reach the statue it will be necessary to make a plaster cast to seven pieces. This work is being done in the "atelier" of the sculptors Simoes de Almeida and Leopoldo de Almeida.

Longer skirts for the winter of 1931-32 were exhibited in the fewer-than-a-dozen of one of the foremost Paris dressmakers during a private fashion parade in which the sweeping lines of the eighteenth century were combined with the demands of the twentieth century girl.

Full, feminine skirts and dresses right to the soles of the shoes from the floor to evening wraps which trailed the floors and evening gowns that trailed the carpets, the show showed how these several modes tower for the forthcoming winter.

School Notes

Michigan Educational Association

The teachers of the Charlevoix schools returned to their work Monday morning with renewed enthusiasm after the splendid addresses heard at the M. E. A. last Thursday and Friday. The three general meetings were of unusual interest. Dr. Harry A. Overstreet, Department of Philosophy and Psychology of the College of the City of New York, spoke on "Building Minds for This Age"; Tom Skeyhill on "The Last of the Long Hunters" and Dr. Fisher of Ann Arbor on "Mahatma Gandhi." Divisional meetings were held for Elementary, High School, Rural, Parent-Teacher, and Physical Education, also section meetings were held in which each teacher received ideas and inspiration in his or her own subject.

The new district officers elected were:

Football

The football game last Saturday gave the losing score to Charlevoix, but the crowd and band gave to their utmost, all through the game.

One of the main attractions at the game was the arrangements of the Kansas marching band. This group is in the field of play, and also aided the broken section in making a more thorough sweep of the grounds.

The fence is about ten feet from the sidelines which enables the players more room to work in, to carry the ball outlines without flying into the crowd.

The crowd cooperated very well in staying on the outside of the fence and giving the teams room enough in which to play.

The band turned out in great form and played many inspiring pieces which urged the crowd into a spirited mood.

Student Election

Student elections will be held this year under the supervision of the Civil Government Classes. The first school election will be held Thursday, A. M. when the nominees are read and talked over by the students and the voting will go on in uniform style. The only election will be for yell-leaders.

Possibly, if this election turns out all right and the classes wish to do so, the class officers will be elected by this method.

Changes in High School

Many changes have been made this year in and around the school building which aid the students and teachers in many ways. This year we have a reading room, which is combined with the principals office. This aids the students in many ways.

Also many changes have occurred in the population of the assembly. Last year the enrollment was 245 but it is only 170 now due to the transferring of the Freshmen to the Junior High building and seats have been removed allowing more floor space.

Thus the students are much more comfortable than last year because of the less congested traffic while classes are passing and at dismissal.

Home Economics Classes

For the past two weeks the ninth grade Home Economics Classes have been engaged in the canning of fruits and vegetables. They have now completed this project and are busily planning the dinner unit. Later they will be given the privilege of serving some of these dinners.

Last week the eighth grade girls were taught the proper breakfasts and how to serve and eat correctly.

"Unreality" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Christian Science Churches on Sunday, October 11.

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "Yea, the darkness beheld not from thee; but the night shineth as the day: the darkness and the light are both alike o thee" (Ps. 139:12).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "Hail God, Truth, create error! No! Doth a phantom send forth at the same place sweet water and bitter? God being everywhere and all-inclusive, how can He be absent or suggest the absence of unnecessary and commonplaces?"

STANDARD OIL LAUNCHES BIG AD CAMPAIGN

CHICAGO, October 7—Standard Oil Company of Indiana announced today plans for a campaign to be maintaining months of 1931 the biggest advertising and sales campaign the company has ever undertaken in so short a period.

Investors have decided that the way to end the trench warfare with depression is to go over the top in something resembling in a business way what a major offensive is in warfare.

Advertising is to lay down the preliminary and prolonged intensive bombardment of gloom and third tenses. And as the barrage prepares the way for the soldiers of the sales organization are to follow with a determined onslaught to secure new business.

Introducing New Gasoline

The advertising campaign will begin October 15 and continue until the middle of December. The main ammunition will be introduction of a new gasoline which the company has been making at refineries for some time and now has a distributing points ready for delivery, but about which the story is not being told in advance of the sales advertising.

Following a series of "teasers" ads the campaign will come out in force on October 15 with large announcements in 1,462 newspapers in the thirteen month central states in which Standard of Indiana operates. These newspapers have a circulation of 12,571,677 in a territory of 32,000,000 population where 8,374,750 cars and trucks are operating with a gasoline consumption of nearly five billion gallons a year. Follow-up advertisements will appear regularly in the following two months.

Newspaper Ads Main Reliance

The newspaper advertising which is to be the main reliance of the campaign, will be supplemented by advertising in trade, and class publications and national magazines, by radio announcements in connection with the broadcasting of the season's big middle west football games from WGN, Chicago, and by twice-a-day brief announcements on thirty-one radio stations in the territory served. Radio advertising will be used primarily to direct attention to the more extensive newspaper advertising. Copy will be changed on billboards, direct mail matter will be circulated, motion pictures will be shown, and practically all other usual forms of advertising will be employed in some supplementary way.

On the basis of family coverage of 175 per cent it is estimated that the campaign will reach approximately a half of delivering 121,655,422 messages regarding the company's products. One hundred forty-one daily papers in Michigan will carry the advertising matter.

The advertising strategists have planned part of the campaign to appeal to women. Women motorists will be told why the new gasoline is a "gasoline for a lady."

"Forced" Motor Oils

While the concentration will be on gasoline advertising, to which the company has devoted little of its funds previously this year, the extensive campaign on motor oils which has been in progress since last March will also be rounded out. In 159 of the leading newspapers of the territory the story of the "forced-feed" motor cars with which the company's motor oils were tested this year will be completed, beginning October 15.

A feature of the motor oil advertising will be use of color ads and "before-and-after" views of the engines of cars which have been tested with

Did Columbus discover America? Or was it discovered by someone else? Or was it discovered by someone before the fact that "in fourteen hundred and ninety-two Columbus sailed the ocean blue" came to be universally known as history?

These questions, which for centuries have been the subject of learned debate, are now being argued with more heat than ever before. The reason is that the Spanish government is preparing to celebrate the four hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the discovery of America by Columbus in 1942. It is planning a world's fair to be held in Spain in that year, and is inviting all the nations of the world to participate in the celebration.

Some of the nations have already accepted the invitation. Others have not. Among the latter are Italy and Portugal. Italy, because it does not believe that Columbus was an Italian. Portugal, because it does not believe that Columbus was a Spaniard.

Portugal's attitude is based on the claim that Columbus was born in Portugal, and that he was a Portuguese navigator in the employ of Portugal when he made his famous voyage. Portugal, therefore, feels that it is entitled to the honor of the discovery, and that Spain is trying to steal it.

Italy's attitude is based on the claim that Columbus was born in Genoa, Italy, and that he was an Italian navigator in the employ of Spain when he made his famous voyage. Italy, therefore, feels that it is entitled to the honor of the discovery, and that Spain is trying to steal it.

Spain's attitude is based on the claim that Columbus was born in Spain, and that he was a Spanish navigator when he made his famous voyage. Spain, therefore, feels that it is entitled to the honor of the discovery, and that Portugal and Italy are trying to steal it.

Spain's claim is the one generally accepted by the world. Portugal's claim is based on the fact that Columbus married a Portuguese girl, and lived in Portugal for a time. Italy's claim is based on the fact that Columbus was born of Italian parents in Genoa.

Spain's claim is based on the fact

SWOPE PLAN HAS ITS DANGERS

Gerald Swope, president of the General Electric Company, proposes a plan for business stabilization which is said to have the approval of Owen D. Young. It contemplates placing all industries under control of a federal commission, with power to adjust production to consumption and otherwise regulate industry.

Such a plan as this has been tried with the railroads, and the railroads are in a sorry plight. It was believed that the Interstate Commerce Law would bring order out of chaos in rail transportation. At the time the law was passed a state of competition existed which it was believed would prove ruinous. It was thought that control by a federal body would stabilize rates and conditions. The practical effect has been steadily mounting railway costs, as steadily increasing freight rates, and finally the bankrupting, practically, of the railroads.

The effect of such control as is proposed would be to prevent the rise of competition in industry. If the government assumes the right to control output, it must also assume the right to fix prices, for it would not do to protect existing industries from competition, and at the same time let them fix the cost of their output. Since the people must pay the prices, there is no reason to believe that any movement except for price lowering, regardless of costs, would succeed. This is the trouble in which the railways find themselves. Their earnings were fixed at a low interest return on the investment during prosperous times, and now that traffic has fallen off there is no place to look for relief.

The federal government might well cooperate with industry in setting up national and state cooperative agencies to prevent over-production. It would of course be difficult to determine just what is over-production, since volume of sales often depends, as in the case of motor cars, upon costs of production and the prices to the consuming public fixed on that basis. It would be hard to determine at any given time what would represent the saturation point of both high priced and low priced cars.

The Swope plan contemplates a dangerous interweaving of politics and business which, once entered upon, would doubtless result in government ownership. If business is to be managed and controlled by a federal board, it might as well be owned and operated by politicians.

AMERICAN EDUCATION IS BEST

Emil Ludwig, famous German historian, has decided that American colleges are the best in the world. And to prove it, he is going to send his son, now only eight years old, to one of them.

"As a matter of fact," he writes, my plan is to send him first for two years of study to a German or Swiss university where he will build a solid foundation of classical culture, which gives to youth a trend toward high idealism and right thinking. In those schools, too, he will take unto himself protective antitoxins against certain dangers that threaten in America. For if a 20-year-old European goes to America unprepared for what awaits him there, he will be drawn into the vortex of incredible tumult, and its confusion may well overwhelm him."

The heaviness of the German nature, brought into sudden contact with the lightness of the American, inclines toward a loss of balance which may be more than temporary, Papa Ludwig feels.

Why then does he wish to send his son to an American college? "The first reason," he says, "is that learning in America is a cheerful thing. Next, the wide gap between teacher and pupil has been bridged in America, and there exists a splendid comradeship, without lack of respect. Because of this, there have arisen between teacher and pupil a cordial affection and mutual confidence.

"Moreover, American colleges have a competitive system, which awakens in the student the ardent desire to prove himself among the foremost. Still another merit of study in America is the great variety of races which have come together in close and friendly communion. All together they are building a new race, Nationals and racial hatreds are unknown.

"In America my son will understand that the people of all nations are equal and have equal rights. He will learn tolerance and understanding. In our schools he would be surrounded by disquieting talk about parties, world-power, revenge, hate against other nations. The wish for power, among American fellow students, will not express itself in terms of the wish to butcher. Living with youth in America, my son will learn that money is better than war, that peace is better than money, and that health and love of his fellows are better than anything else."

Shrines In American History

By JAMES W. BROOKS

LINCOLN SPEECH MEMORIAL
GETTYSBURG, PA.

A tall gaunt man from out of the West came to this place with a burden heavy weighing heavily upon his soul. With tongue made vibrant by the anguish in his heart, and with eyes of hope lifted toward the blue vaulted heavens above he broke into an audible prayer which the world knows as Lincoln's Address at Gettysburg. That prayer has been answered and the new nation for which he prayed has become the crowning achievement in self government among nations of the earth. The traveler who pauses here may well reflect upon this memorial as a shrine among shrines in American history.

IN TIMES OF DEPRESSION

In times of economic depression assistance is readily given to philanthropic organizations engaged in family relief. Even though a man is unemployed he must be fed, clothed and housed. But while help is generously given to family organizations that does not mean that support should be withdrawn from altruistic organizations described as character-building in their objectives. In times of business distress it is imperative that these organizations carry on.

The raising of funds for philanthropic purposes in many cities is entrusted to a community chest organization. These organizations are now focusing on family relief activities and in some instances have asked certain character-building societies to refrench.

Such an organization as the Boys' Club Federation of America illustrates the point. Boys' clubs have been established in more than 150 cities serving more than 250,000 boys and are placing underprivileged youngsters in wholesome surroundings. A reduction in juvenile delinquency is invariably the result.

Even in times like these it would be most unfortunate if any boys' club suffered because of lack of adequate financial support. The clubs have seen the depression throw upon them an added burden. They should be enabled to carry on.

FROM FRYING PAN TO FIRE

A move has been started to establish state insurance for automobiles, under the compulsory casualty insurance law, in Massachusetts. Backers of the bill denounce the new rate schedule prepared by the State Insurance Commissioner.

Contrasted with the move, Governor Ely of Massachusetts has given the public facts which show that in 1920 the insurance companies of the state received premiums $21,000,000, expended $16,000,000 in payment of losses, and incurred operating expenses of $8,000,000, leaving a deficit of about $3,000,000. He states that in four years the insurance companies had probably lost $9,000,000 through their carrying of automobile liability insurance in his state. The higher rates planned for 1932, he said, were necessary because of the 65,000 accidents occurring in 1930.

The Massachusetts compulsory automobile liability insurance law has been, from any ordinary standard, a complete failure. Accidents have not gone down; rates have been raised; litigation has crowded the courts; faked claims have been numerous. Those who think the way out is through a state fund, backed by the public treasury and administered by politics, are entitled to their opinion. But it is interesting to note that before the Massachusetts law was passed there was much agitation for similar laws in many other states. Since witnessing the Massachusetts experiment no other state has adopted such a law or even given one serious consideration.

A NATIONAL ISSUE

Paragraphs from the day's news indicate that the tax question is an outstanding issue from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Harry F. Long, Commissioner of Corporations and Taxation of Massachusetts, predicts that the 1932 tax bill for that state will increase $15,000,000. He says that Massachusetts taxes have increased 122 per cent in the last 15 years.

Press reports from Chicago state that more than $3,000,000,000 worth of real estate in Cook County, Illinois, owned by 396,524 individuals, will be put on sale for delinquent taxes by the county treasurer because of nonpayment of 1929 taxes. Injunctions or stays granted pending hearings of protest will prevent the bulk of the property from being auctioned off at this time, however.

In Oregon, the people are not only struggling with a heavy property tax but they are also loaded with a state income tax which takes a straight five per cent of their income and also an intangibles tax which takes eight per cent of any income from money, bonds, mortgages, etc.

The foregoing are merely high lights of conditions that exist in all parts of the country and are the strongest arguments that can be advanced as to why a determined stand must be made against proposals which cut still deeper into the family income via the public bond issue and taxation route.

THE GOLD STANDARD

Great Britain sought to show that it was smarter than Germany, in avoiding the collapse of its financial house of cards, by "temporarily" abandoning the gold standard. Sweden, Norway, and Denmark have imitated Great Britain's action.

For more than a hundred years silver and gold were accepted on a definite ratio of value at the mint. Then came the 1896 battle for free silver led by William Jennings Bryan, and his defeat for the Presidency. After the 1900 elections bimetallism lost its appeal in America. The movement for the gold standard swept the big governments of the old world.

The world seems dumb enough, and today only the United States and France are "sitting pretty" with their gold piled high. That is because the people of other nations think that their precious money is safe here and in France.

London, a few years ago, was the "greatest bank of the World" but when payments in gold were demanded in tremendous volume for international obligations Great Britain's money was placed on an equal value. When sterling fell in international values that meant all of Great Britain's money fell, including gold.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

TAKE ACCOUNT, TOO, OF YOUR BLESSINGS

By George R. Lockwood

Press dispatches carry the story of a Bulgarian who committed suicide the other day because he had been ordered deported to his native land from America. Every day deportation is resisted by aliens illegally in the country as if this were a sentence to death.

A pathetic story comes from Burgas, Bulgaria. Fishermen on the Black Sea saw a boat drifting, apparently empty. Investigating, they found in it four children, 4 to 12 years of age, completely exhausted. They had been drifting in the boat for days, the eldest explained, and they were "on their way to America." In their native village of Constanza, Bulgaria, they had heard stories of the land where there was more happiness for children, and leaving a note at home, they had run away.

Hundreds of millions of people, young and old, in other countries, dream of coming to America. Scores of millions have come. America has absorbed millions of aliens during the past half century. They have come here empty handed. Here millions of them have found opportunities unknown of in the lands where they were born.

A few years ago it was necessary for America to limit this migration. Except for our immigration laws, it is probable that a yearly entry of immigrants then rising to a million, would long ago have risen to two millions. This country slowed down this migration only because the economic and social system of the United States could not permanently stand this dilution of the stock of which it is already here. It was bringing some strength but more weakness to the republic which once boasted that it was the haven for the oppressed of all lands.

While the whole world would rush to America for greater prosperity and security if it could, how much appreciation of America is felt or voiced by those already here? American children possess what those poor Bulgarian children were ready to trust themselves to the cold and to the waves in the hope of finding. Do we sufficiently count the values of what we possess in this republic of ours, or do we spend the most of our time complaining and finding fault?

The act of appreciation seems almost lost. We live in an age of sophism, of criticism, of almost universal fault finding. Now that we are in a temporary period of depression, we fail to take account of the fact that however serious our plight, our adversity would be prosperity in the Old World. This habit of "kicking" was becoming almost universal even while we were in the midst of prosperous days. The Bible tells of the race that "waxed fat and wickked" and ultimately brought about its own destruction. The lesson is worth thinking over.

When you are inclined to take a dark view of things in the country in which you have enjoyed so much that makes for human happiness, think of the alien who killed himself because he was about to be sent away from America, and of the pathetic little group of children tossing on the Black Sea trying to bring their sufferings to reach a happier land.

DEMAND GOVERNMENT TAX ECONOMY

A good foundation for any political platform, municipal, state or national, would be: "Restrict governmental activities to the business of governing, and thus allay the fear of heavy tax increases that kill industrial development and employment."

Officeholders give their constituents assurance of tax reduction and economy in government—during their campaigns. Once they are safely established in office they customarily forget their pledge. The result is a constant increase in the number of government bureaus and employees, more paternalism, higher taxes.

We face a gigantic federal deficit that cannot be made up by prayer. Only the most stringent economy, the most rigid restriction of governmental activities, can prevent taxes from rising to intolerably high levels in the next few years. The public must demand that officeholders stand for tax reduction and fulfill their pledges when they are given their offices.

Pertinent Paragraphs

According to dispatches from Moscow the pay of soviet workers has been boosted thirty per cent, which ought to make it about ten cents a day.

Now they are talking about a world gold parley. Of course, Uncle Sam will be expected to furnish the gold and Europe the parleying.

The way everything is twisted all over the world leads to the suggestion that the League of Nations adopt the pretzel as its emblem.

Maybe if Columbus had known what kind of a fix this country was going to get in eventually, he would have turned around and started back home before he sighted land.

In the business and economic world just now our go-getters of a few years ago seem to have turned into come-quitters.

Speaking of getting away from the gold standard, wouldn't William Jennings Bryan be enjoying a few silent chuckles if he were alive today and knew what was going on in the world?

A shark attacks swimmers off the coast of Florida now, according to press reports. The real estate sharks down there, however, have been quiescent for some time.

An Arkansas mathematician has trisected an angle with a compass and straight edge. Now if he will just solve the problem of what to do with the surplus cotton we will be getting somewhere.

The Democrats might blame the grasshopper plague on to President Hoover but we are doubtful whether even Pat Harrison would have the heart to charge him with the locusts that are ravaging the wheat fields down in Argentina.

According to the Fort Wayne News-Sentinel, Iceland has only had three murders in sixty years. We were wondering why they didn't make any moving picture dramas with an Icelandic background.

We used to laugh at those detective yarns in which the super-sleuth would disguise himself so that his best friend wouldn't know him; but now that we have noted what funny things these new Eugenia hats do to the appearance of some of those who wear them we are willing to believe most anything.

Latest reports from the southern legislative battlegrounds would indicate that next year the farmers, as usual, will plant as much cotton as they please.

In spite of the depression and the series of crises in Great Britain we note that the directors of the Bank of England met the other day and declared the usual dividend of six per cent.

All European observers agree that prosperity of that continent depends on the getting together of Germany and France. But it depends somewhat on what they get together with.

"Our people are beginning to realize that our burden of taxation, state and national, is becoming almost unbearable. The annual cost of Government, Federal, State and local, rose from $7,000,000,000 in 1913 to $12,000,000,000 in 1927 and it is now rapidly approaching $16,000,000,000 a year."—Silas H. Strawn, President, Chamber of Commerce of the United States.

Mr. M. J. Stockman has had about 50 men employed from his fish house on the point north of this village. No trace of the thief or thieves.

The propeller City of Fremont, which touched here on Wednesday, burned up, narrowly escaped destruction on Tuesday. From passengers who were on board we learn the particulars: The Fremont left Mackinac Monday at which time our information took passage. When between Cross Village and Little Traverse she passed a steamer ablaze in the harbor, was that was running and broached too in the troughs. As soon as this was ascertained the captain gave orders to get up all the steam possible and an effort was made to back up to the steamer, but the fire was too hot. But for some reason the engine refused to work, and the boat lay at the mercy of the waves. She rolled so terribly that the rails touched the water and the stiff west wind soon had the fire driving from the stern to the bow. The flames spread into the smoke stack filling the boat with smoke and driving the firemen and engineer from their places. Then the alarm of fire was raised by some indiscreet person, and a panic ensued among the passengers. Life preservers were hastily brought out, and hope given up. But with remarkable presence of mind Capt. Davis drove the firemen below to close the furnace doors, which had been left open in their hasty retreat. When this was done the engineer was enabled to resume his post, the engine was started and she made out to get her stern to the gale and arrived here safely on Wednesday. Mrs. I. E. Webster, of this place, was a passenger from Mackinac, and her conduct through this ordeal is spoken of as being brave to a remarkable degree. Dr. Smith, of Pine Lake, and Charles Davidson, of Little Traverse, were also passengers whose conduct during this trial merits commendation. An effort was made to hush the matter up, but we got our information from a reliable source, and will vouch for its truth. It was truly an escape from the jaws of death as one half hour more would have seen the Fremont among the breakers.

TERRIBLE CONFLAGRATION IN CHICAGO, GLEN HAVEN ALSO RUINED BY FIRE

Never within our recollection has the Demon of Flame made such fearful havoc as the fall. By the Fourteenth City, Monday, we learned that a fire had broken out in Chicago, and was making rapid headway toward the heart of the city. From a reliable source we now learn that the fire has leaped the South Branch, destroyed the N. T. Co.', docks, all the shipping in that vicinity, and three grain elevators! The heavy wind which prevailed drove the flames into the more populous and wealthy portions of the city, destroying the Sherman House, Opera House, Court House, Bridewell and forty prisoners who were confined therein met a terrible death. The fire progressed so rapidly that firemen were driven from their streets which were left to the flames. At last advices the fire was still raging and the fire department of Milwaukee, rolled so terribly that the rails touched the water and the stiff west wind which was then prevailing blew into the smoke stack filling the boat with smoke and driving the firemen and engineer from their places. Then the alarm of fire was raised by some indiscreet person, and a panic ensued among the passengers. Life preservers were hastily brought out, and hope given up. But with remarkable presence of mind Capt. Davis drove

On a night of moon-madness in old New Orleans, Loren Garde, destined by Norse and French ancestry to be a child of devil-may-care, crosses blades with a masquerading nobleman in the sight of Dulce of the purple eyes. That is the end of his tranquility and the beginning of many things. Such a man is a wildcat in fight and a tempest in love.

When PAIN Comes

WHAT many people call indigestion very often is due to too much acid in the stomach. The stomach setves have become over-stimulated, and food seems to sour. The excessive acid irritates. But to neutralize the acids instantly, what the best physicians and medical science is Phillips Milk of Magnesia.

One spoonful of this harmless, tasteless alkali in water neutralizes instantly many times that much acid, and the symptoms disappear at once. You will never use crude methods when once you learn the efficiency of this. Go get a small bottle to try.

Be sure to get the genuine Phillips Milk of Magnesia prescribed by physicians for 50 years in correcting excess acids. 25c and 50c a bottle—any druggist.

Mare and Marr

Published George Ade said in a recent talk:

"Nobody got rich and more particular who didn't work. As saved the Times Wonder was considered terrible when it started. Now it's part of today's world calendar. Times Wonder Clock."

Scores of words were added to make out a list of others that they'd like to write smarts on. One got voted a top word:

"Mr. Hard Man," a Jerome Kern-Oscar Hammerstein 2d-Otto Harbach show, "Sunny Days," with Marilyn Miller and Clifton Webb featured, opens tonight at the Globe theater, New York.

"I'm not excited with this yet," she said. "It seems so darn prehistoric."

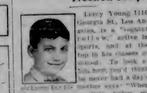
Los Angeles Boy Needed Help



Leroy Young, 1116 Georgia St., Los Angeles, is a "super twelve," active in sports, and at the top in his classes at school. To look at him, how'd think he never had a day's sickness from the mother says. "When Leroy was just a little fellow we found his stomach and bowels sore, weak. He kept suffering from constipation. Nothing he ate agreed with him. He was fretful, feverish and pale.

"Then we started giving him California Fig Syrup. The soundness improved quickly. His constipation and biliousness stopped and he has had no more trouble of this kind. I have since used California Fig Syrup with him for colds and upset spells. He likes it because it tastes so good and I like it because it helps him so wonderfully."

California Fig Syrup has been the trusted standby of mothers for over 50 years. Lending properties recommend it. It is purely vegetable and works with Nature to regulate, tone and strengthen the stomach and bowels of children so they get full nourishment from their food and grow as vitalized in a normal way.

Four million bottles used a year shows how mothers depend on it. Always look for the word "California" on the carton to be sure of getting the genuine.

The state parks of the country, now numbering more than 900, were by no means idle areas last year. Figures gathered by the National Park service indicate that there were thousands visitors in the reserves more last year, making an average of three per park. The parks increasingly averaged 1,500 acres each although normally many were much larger and many much smaller.

Belize Depends on Mahogany Trade

Is the Least Known Bit of British America.

Washington.—A footnote in British Honduras swept into the front pages of the country the name of Belize, capital of this little known bit of British America.

Belize, the city, with a population of only 15,000 people would be a small town elsewhere, but it is the metropolis of England's section of the dense, tropical jungles in the south east corner of the Yucatan peninsula," says a bulletin from the National Geographic society.

COST OF AN EDUCATION

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

A clergyman of standing mentioned recently an article from a father of three children, all of whom are in college, in which a strong protest is made against the increasing cost of education. The writer claimed that at least a large part of his children's expenses might be eliminated if the average young person going to college would be satisfied with one thing less than the very best.

Briefly, he complained that to send his three children to the institutions which they were attending was costing him approximately $3,500 a year; and this amount is exclusive of clothing and a number of additional expenses.

I am quite sure that the average cost of an education in the representative colleges of the country is far less than this sum alleges, and should be correctly. Incidental needs were not included in both.

When the soldiers were sent to be making a good change of their spoilings any trade, the Spanish changed the's pastry and sugar harvesting them. A series of wars and ill-will between Spain and England followed. In 1798 the Spaniards attacking Belize were driven off by British settlers with whom, support or arms and fortunately. In 1862 the "settlement" was declared a colony, and was given a parliament somewhat under the governor of Jamaica. In 1862 it became a separate colony.

"In addition to mahogany and logwood Belize carries on an active trade with the United States in bananas, coconuts, citrus fruits, cocoa, and chicozapte of which chicle, the latter the new material of chewing gum. Grown in the Petén district inside the small part of the country's total 7,535 does not go to the United States. In addition British Honduras is one of America's best Central American customers, buying nearly $2,000,000 worth of its products in 1929.

Offspring to Help Kansas Man Run Waco-Wego.

Wellfield, Kans.—George Wimbleton Winders, well-known Kansas farmer, has brought his real estate activities to Wellfield, where he has purchased the entire town of Waco-Wego, near here, so that he can find work for three boys and a daughter.

John were difficult to find in Wellfield this summer, Winders said, so he purchased the business district of Waco-Wego so that John, Jim, George Wood, assistant Wellfield minister, and Helen, twenty, would find something to do.

Incidentally, Winders' purchase was a gamble, a fitting climax to grocery store, with contents, machinery, safe, all existing just a house. It will be the first business deals that his family will be interested.

Mr. and Mrs. Winders plan to make this move the busiest since in their wheat-growing county. Their first job will have the manager cleaning and restoring and adding modern conveniences.

In addition to being the head of his various mercantile establishments, Winders will carry the title of mayor, city manager and chief of police of Waco-Wego.

Winders has given up his real estate business in Wellfield and has resigned as president of the Kansas real estate board so that he can devote more time to his new business.

The fifth city which Winders will finally own or be interested in as actual business may be started a great deal by transcontinental traveling.

Evans has just finished his junior year in the college with which I graduated. He graduated four years ago from a small high school in a country town. He is the eldest of three children. His father having a clerical position which does not pay him as much a year as the corporation has further mentioned above spent annually on each of his children.

Under this sort of high school a year working and saving his money before trying to enter college. He got a job at college, which enabled him to earn his board and during his short vacations at Christmas and Easter time. He told a good position each summer by his home economics, he has found a position in college for the last two years which pays him fifty dollars a month. He dresses well because he takes care of his clothes. He has also a small car, which one finds in a freshman. He has made wonderful headway with many people. He has a pleasing social life. He has done what others do, and he has not any long ago that during the three years in college he had over fifty dollars. Not everyone would do as well on one thousand dollars. Not everyone would do as well on two thousand dollars. Not everyone would do as well on three thousand dollars. A college education costs about what one wants to make it cost.

DOLLAR TRACED TO "PIECES OF EIGHT"

American Currency Since the Days of 1792.

In its different coinages and issues of paper, the American dollar has never been "pegged" to any standard, as the word is used in finance. It has always been a unit of value, and has been expressed in terms of gold, silver, or both, according to the laws of the time. The United States mint was established in 1792, and the first dollars were coined from gold of the purity of 892.4 parts fine to 107.6 parts alloy. The fineness of silver dollars was 416 parts fine to 484 parts alloy. The alloy used was copper. The weight of the gold dollar was 27 grains, and of the silver dollar 416 grains. The proportion between silver and gold was fixed at 15 to 1.

The Spanish dollar had been accepted as legal tender in the United States since 1782, and remained so until 1857. Many of the Spanish dollars were cut into pieces to provide small change. Hence the expression "pieces of eight" for the Spanish dollar. The Spanish dollar was divided into 8 reals, and a dollar or piece of eight was worth 8 reals. Hence the term "two bits" for a quarter, which is one-fourth of a dollar.

The Mexican dollar was also legal tender in the United States from 1857 to 1873. It was of the same weight and fineness as the Spanish dollar.

The Trade dollar was coined from 1873 to 1885 for use in trade with China. It was of the weight of 420 grains troy, and contained 900 parts of silver to 100 parts of copper.

The Morgan dollar was coined from 1878 to 1904, and in 1921. It contained 412½ grains of silver, 9/10 fine, and 37½ grains of copper alloy. The Peace dollar was coined from 1921 to 1928. It contained the same amount of silver and alloy as the Morgan dollar.

Ancient Indian City Discovered in Nebraska

Sweetwater, Neb.—High on a bluff overlooking Elsner creek, 11½ miles west of the Pawnee Indians of the Nebraska plains built a city.

The site of the ancient city of the plains, west of here, was discovered this summer by archeologists working to trace the history of some of the native Indian tribes. The old city, buried by a few feet of earth, is believed to have flourished 500 years ago.

With new and forgotten the trees have expanded into an orchard of 3000 trees, covering an area of about 300 acres.

Wells and America

At H. S. Wells made a survey of the United States a number of years ago to see how the future in America would be portrayed in the minds of its residents by the average citizen. Instead of his remarks being optimistic as the future of his country, he stated that the average citizen feared to be a serial to binding and grain. If he is, the future can needs to be more than a continuous serial discussions in the line of divine opportunities. What are the future may have in store for us, history alone is a dead description of large portions of the earth as seen with Tammany Hall as a front.—H. R. Werner in Tom-mony Hall.

Band News

Up to the present time much of the work has been to develop a "Big" Band which will appear at the athletic contests. Thus the class study has pertained mostly to marches suitable for such functions. Part of the class periods have been used for drilling, a factor which is entirely new.

It is planned that the daily class period not only be used for rehearsing but much of the time will be spent on discussions of the different instruments of the band, theoretical work will be given, a study will be made of tone production, intonation, ear training and sight reading.

Under the present plan of instruction, try-outs are held the first week of each month. Thos students who are deserving of advancement will have an opportunity to take advantage of a higher rank as he progresses. The lodging of these tryouts is not merely the sole judgment of the director but each student must take part in selecting the candidates. The results of the try outs held this week are as follows:

Glee Clubs and Chorus

The girls and boys Glee Clubs meet individually on Monday, Wednesday and Friday. Then on Tuesdays and Thursdays the groups combine for chorus which is under the direction of Mr. Rider with Miss Atkinson as accompanist.

The boys Glee Club will make their first appearance on Monday evening October 19, when they will entertain the Charlevoix County Council of Religious Education at their evening meeting on that day.

Instrumental Classes

Instrumental classes have recently been organized for those students who wish instruction. Approximately 20 students have enrolled thus far. All students are eligible for these classes, the only requirement being that they own an instrument. The classes consist namely of 4th and 5th grades and junior high pupils.

Each class will meet once each week until all students are familiar with all keys and have a general understanding of notation. Then in addition to the regular classes, once each week combined classes will meet for ensemble playing. In this way the students will be trained for the High School Band and when they have sufficiently mastered the art of ensemble playing will be admitted to the band on their general ability.

It is urged by the director that parents take advantage of this opportunity for their children to gain a knowledge of instrumental music which is undoubtedly an asset to a child's school work. Mr. Rider will be only too happy to consult with parents on any questions they may have concerning the work.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION

UNEXPECTEDLY LARGE NUMBER ATTEND COUNTY MEET

The regular convention of the Charlevoix Sunday School Association took place at the Charlevoix Methodist Church last Monday afternoon and evening. Some time ago this was organized as the Charlevoix County Council of Religious Education, affiliated with the State Council. The program committee had given much thought, and spared no pains in planning a strong gathering, with the President of Olivet College as the principal attraction.

Interest was stimulated by the giving of a banner to the school having the largest attendance at the Charlevoix Sunday School Rally, a banner which is undoubtedly an asset to a child's school work. Mr. Rider will be only too happy to consult with parents on any questions they may have concerning the work.

A form of "contest with themselves" is being carried on by the young people of the Methodist church. A large "graph" has been put on the wall, which will show the total fall to attendance. Next Sunday evening, a fine program will be given, led by Miss Samuel Black, on the general series—"Our Relation to Others." with special reference to the home. Thirty three were in attendance last Sunday evening, and they want it to be larger next time. The new officers are launching a fine year's work.

THE PILGRIM CIRCLE CELEBRATES ANNIVERSARY

The Pilgrim Circle of the Congregational Ladies' Aid Society celebrated the tenth anniversary of its organization last Friday afternoon at the home of the president, Mrs. Joseph Bosgraf, with over fifty members and friends present.

Mrs. Saltonstall gave the history of the Circle for the ten years. Mrs. Bosgraf read an original poem. The Misses Terrell and Ince sang a duet very effectively and also led the company in singing "Auld Lang Syne" and "Blest Be The Tie That Binds". Mrs. Hillier was in charge of the program.

The birthday cakes, joint together for all the members, the ashes of the North Side and Valley Circles into the Pilgrim Circle and beautifully decorated with candles, flowers and appropriate insignia, were a feature of the refreshments. The cakes were made by Mrs. Kelderhouse who with Mrs. Bartlett, Mrs. Cooper, Miss Mae, Mrs. Bills, Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Sherrin assisted the hostess in serving.

Dr. and Mrs. Carleton Dean entertained at 6 o'clock dinner Monday evening in honor of Professor Bowling the Press, and Mrs. James King of Olivet College. Mr. and Mrs. Harley Hall, Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Fessenden, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Wood, Mr. and Mrs. Archie Livingston, Rev. and Mrs. B. Parker and Pres. and Mrs. James King.

LEGION HOLDS ANOTHER OLD TIME DANCE, OCT. 28

Another old time dance will be held at the Legion Home on East Fairfield Avenue, Wednesday evening October 28th, the proceeds of which will be devoted to the work of alleviating distress among the needy persons in the county. Dances, both round and square, will be the order.

An effort is being made to secure the services of the same popular orchestra that has played at previous dances given by the local Legion and it is a good time to be assured. Come and help a good cause along. A considerable quantity of potatoes, beans and other products have already been collected but more is needed and, of course, there is some extra cooking to be done in the work. Everybody could not be apart to better advantage, and you will be enjoying a good time in the bargain.

NIMRODS OF LOCAL I. O. O. F. ARE ON HUNTING EXPEDITION

Local Nimrods, members of Charlevoix Encampment No. 19, I. O. O. F. are afield this week with their shells and weapons intent on taking wild game and through their effort paving the way for a game supper to be served at I. O. O. F. temple Friday evening, October 24th.

Members from Petoskey and Boyne City encampments have accepted an invitation and will be present, guests of Charlevoix encampment and also to attend an important business meeting of interest to all members, scheduled for the same evening.

Two notables in encampment work, Grand Patriarch David Howard, of Muskegon, and Grand Scribe, Edward Hoyt, of Battle Creek, have signified their intention of visiting the local encampment to attend the business session and participate in the game supper, which bids fair to be the prime feature of the evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Foster of Belvidere are business visitors here today.

Charlevoix residents are beginning to make their annual trip to points south or west. Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Kibbe are the latest to start for the south, having left here early this week for Florida, via the motor route.

Mr. and Mrs. Allan Shapton leave for the south today, via the motor car, with Miami, Florida, as their objective.

COLORFUL RANGERS OF TEXAS IN FILM

The Canadian Southwest Mounted has supplied plots for innumerable films and stories—but the Texas Rangers, who are the only police in existence that offer real competition to the picturesque Northwest Mounted, have seldom been exploited through their methods.

Stationed at the southern extremity of the United States it is the duty of the hard-riding organization to protect not only the interests of the honest cattle owners of the Lone Star State, but to patrol the Mexican border, and quell any minor riots that may occur. Composed mainly of cowboys and hardy adventurers who admit the life because of the danger involved, the Rangers lead quite an colorful an existence as their northern cousins.

Taking advantage of picture representations of the genius Columbia Pictures has produced a film which depicts the exploits of three daring men. It is "The Texas Rangers," which is scheduled to run at the Palace Theatre for five days beginning next Wednesday. The popular Buck Jones, in the role of a Texas Ranger, is supported by a cast of three dozen players in his character, as stressed in the drama, that is particularly typical of the Rangers, is his keen sense of justice. This quality, as necessary to men who must frequently use their own judgment, has ever been noted as one of the commendable features of the Rangers by all who have come in contact with them. Many are the tales of quick and ready justice administered and wrongs righted by these brave men.

Another popular old time dance, Wednesday evening, October 28th, at Legion Home. $75 5th per couple. Extra ladies' free. 2661

TOP O'MICHIGAN POTATO SHOW

Next week the Ninth Annual Potato, Apple and Seed Show is being held at Gaylord.

While its beginning dates back only to 1923, it has grown to be the leading agricultural institution in northern Michigan. At first comprising only five counties, it now comprises twelve, all working together for better agriculture in the Top O'Michigan.

For these years only potatoes were exhibited; later apples were added and alfalfa seed has been admitted for the first time this year.

It is a growing institution and one every farmer in the Top O'Michigan should visit whether he be an exhibitor or not.

The three days are full of interesting and instructive programs. Several very different individuals will have a definite part in the program, each of them of state reputation, a few of national reputation, and one of international fame.

Plan now to go down to the show and take an exhibit if possible.

The dates are October 28, 29, and 30.

According to recent reports the fishing toy Josephine, operated out of the port for some years by Captain Charles Bissell, lies on the bottom of the harbor at Sturgeon Bay, where she went down. The hull of the toy is badly damaged. So much so that it is probable that no effort will be made to raise the sunken vessel. Whether or not the machinery and equipment can be salvaged is at this time a problematical proposition.

Mr. and Mrs. "Gene" D'Vincent of Rogers City were guests of Charlevoix friends a few hours Tuesday morning their visit here on their return trip from Grand Rapids, where they were guests at the golden wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. John O'Donnell, former Charlevoix County residents.

Tuesday, October 20, Ray Newland left a small bunch of cheery blossoms at the Sentinel Office, taken from a tree that is working over time on his home grounds.

The Lady Barcabees will meet with Mrs. O. D. Hammond Tuesday night, October 27th. All members please be present.

Address by Dr. King

On Monday morning the Normal, Junior and Senior High had the pleasure of listening to Dr. King, president of Olivet college. Dr. King chose as the topic "What is High School For?" It is for living! Is it for learning? Is it for life? Outside of the Church and the home, the school is the most beneficial part of life. High School should teach us how to live. The greatest purpose of education is to make us alive, to teach us to appreciate the variety of interests around us. An educated man is not one who has studied and learned the material in his book but one who knows that he knows and can get the people to feel what he knows. He can use his education in any problem or situations that may spring up. Education should give us the vision to see, to appreciate the finenss of life and to build up character.

Dr. King gave many examples to illustrate his address and it was greatly enjoyed by the listeners.

DIRECTOR SEES VARIETY IN MARX HUMOR

The Four Marx Brothers do not miss a trick when it comes to providing comedy on the screen. In fact Director Norman Mcleod, who framed their stock carried and most facile some opus, "Monkey Business" coming to the Palace Theatre for two large beginning next Saturday, sees in their efforts on the screen every known comedy method, ranging from slapstick to subtle satire.

"Groucho uses smart wise-cracks, Chico attends to the dialect comedy, Harpo handles pantomime and Zeppo plays straight to the three with situations as his foils. These you have the main methods of securing laughs.

"Groucho, with his heavy mustaches and his long cigar is the wise fellow. His dialogue is carefully rounded so that practically every quotum is a laugh line, ranging from smart chatter to the sophisticated type in point.

"Laugh situations have always been the backbone of screen comedies. The four boys combine forces for this.

"Zeppo, as the tone with smart straight men in effect overlooked when one weighs the comedy of a production. However, the foil is always important and being one for three comedians is no easy task."

Miss Lyrta Lindley, a visitor at Cincinnati for some weeks returned home last Friday. After visiting her parents for a short time she will go to Grand Rapids possibly for the winter.

GOLDEN WEDDING IS CELEBRATED

Mr. and Mrs. John O'Donnell, who were united in marriage at Beaver Island October 17, 1881, celebrated their golden wedding anniversary at the house of their daughter, Mrs. Robert Gibson, on Newland Street, N. W. Grand Rapids last Saturday.

Five of their sons and daughters, Mrs. John Grill of St. James, Mrs. Robert Gibson and Mrs. Asma Hampton of Grand Rapids, Edward and Patrick O'Donnell and son grandchildren were present at the function, all of Grand Rapids. Also the following friends were guests at the event. Mrs. Edward Pratt, who acted as one of the bridesmaids at the ceremony fifty years ago, now living at Grand Haven, Mr. and Mrs. Gene D'Vincent of Rogers City, Mr. and Mrs. Owen D. Gallagher of Grand Haven, Mr. John Brown and Mr. Charles O'Donnell of Milwaukee.

The wonderful couple received a large number of congratulatory messages from distant friends and were the recipients of many beautiful and useful presents, a number of which were remembrances of the occasion.

Mr. and Mrs. O'Donnell for a long term of years resided at St. James. More recent years they have been living in Grand Rapids.

Government work that has been in progress on the north and south revetments at the entrance to Charlevoix harbor and work around the supply station near the upper river, was concluded for the season, last Saturday. The following day the barge used in connection with the work, with other extensive equipment in tow, cleared this port to points further south.

Oscar F. Nelson, Helmar Nelson and Floyd Brown found heavy weather sailing them when they went to St. James last week on a shooting expedition. Even at that they report moderate luck insofar as hunting was concerned, a pleasant trip on the inland and a good time all along the line.

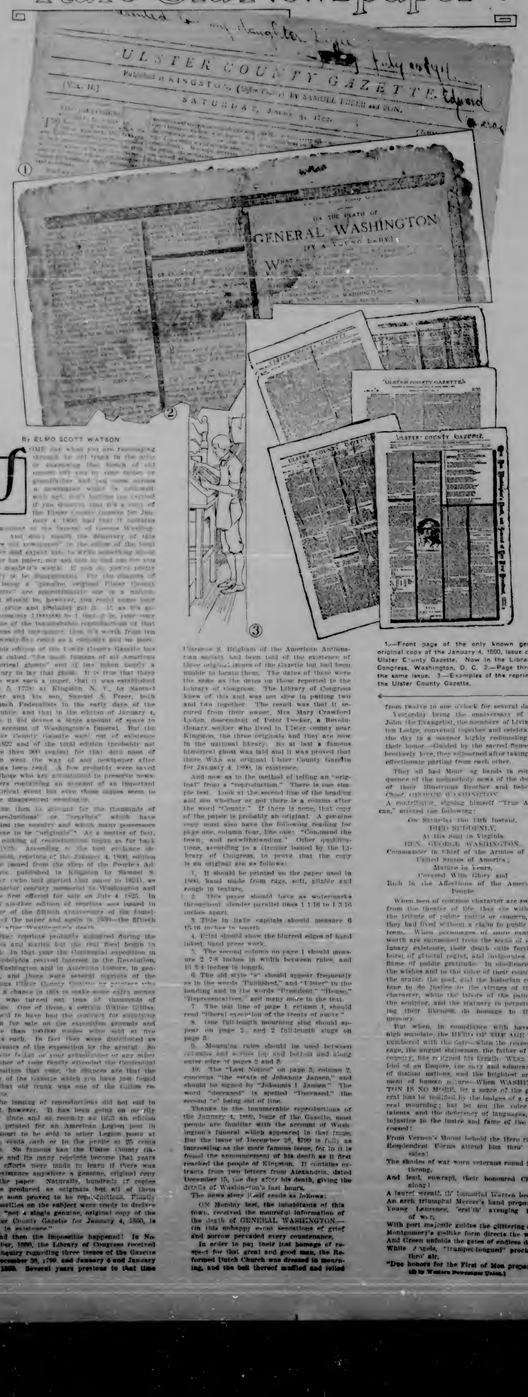
Have You a Copy of This "Rare Old Newspaper"?



By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

SOME day when you are rummaging around in the attic or basement or examining that bunch of old papers left you by your father and grandfather and long some autumn a newspaper will be unfolded if you discover that it's a copy of the Ulster County Gazette, by Samuel Freer and his son, Samuel S. Freer, both staunch Federalists in the early days of the Republic and that in the edition of January 4, 1830, it did devote a large amount of space to the account of Washington's funeral. But the Ulster County Gazette sank out of existence in 1857 and if a bound edition thereof is more than 200 copies of that sum must of them went the way of all newspapers after it has been read. A few probably were saved by those who are interested in preserving old papers containing an account of an important historical event but even those copies seem to have disappeared in time.

Here then is account for the thousands of "copyrighted" "rare" "old" papers that have flooded the country and which many possessors believe to be "collectible." As a matter of fact, the sudden appearance of these papers dates as 1926. According to the best evidence discovered, between 1923 and 1926, a number were issued from the shop of the People's Advocate, published in Binghamton by Stewart S. Freer (who had started that paper in 1921), as a humble country memorial to Washington and were first offered for sale on July 4 1925. In that auld-lang syne edition of reprints was issued in honor of the 200th anniversary of the birth of Washington of the paper and again in 1930—the fiftieth year of the Washington's death.

Other reprints probably scattered during the 1920s and sixties but the real flood began in 1932. In that year the Continental Congress in Philadelphia received interest in the Revolution, the Washington bicentennial and the depression era, and there were several reprints of the famous 1789 Gazette. However no one seems to have a chance in 1935 to make some extra money and when they do get some of the thousands that is that old trunk was one of the Gillies reprints.

The issuing of reproductions did not end in 1935, however. It has been going on our "fly over times and as recently as 1937 an edition was printed in Mount Vernon, Va., and sent to Missouri to be sold to other Legion posts at the big events such as the parade at 25 cents each. So famous a publication (name of paper) as the Saturday Evening Post could not resist the temptation and in 1938 issued a reprint of the issue of December 28, 1799 in which appeared the announcement of his death as it first reached the people of Philadelphia. A similar extracts from two letters from Alexandria, dated December 15, 16 and 17 "the death, giving the details of Washington's last hours.

The news story "still reads as follows:

ON Monday last, the inhabitants of this town, received the mournful information of the death of GENERAL WASHINGTON. In this unhappy event bewaitings of grief and sorrow prevailed every countenance.

In order to pay their last homage of respect for that great and good man, the Reformed Dutch Church was dressed in mourning, and the bell thereof muffled and tolled from twelve to one o'clock for several days.

Yesterday being the anniversary of St. John the Evangelist, the members of Livingston Lodge, convened together, and celebrated the day in a manner highly ordinating to their honor—decided by the solemnity of the day, heathenly love, they silenced after taking an affectionate glass of wine.

They will bad Mour ng bands in consequence of the melancholy death of the author of their Illustrious Brother in Masonry, late Chief, GEORGE WASHINGTON.

On Saturday the 19th instant,
DIED SUDDENLY,
At his seat in Virginia,
GEN. GEORGE WASHINGTON,
Commander in chief of the Armies of the United States of America;
Mature in years,
Covered With Glory and
Rich in the affections of the American People.

When been of common character are swept from the theatre of life, they are without the limits of public notice or concern, as they had lived without a claim to public attentions. When personages of more exalted worth are summoned from the walks of ordinary existence, their death calls forth a burst of general regret, and resplendent the Rime of public gratitude. In obedience to the wishes and to the usage of their country, the orator, the poet, and the historian resort to the bodies to the virtues of their character, while the honor of the departed is the sanction, and the memory is perpetuated by their talents, in homage to their memory.

But when, in compliance with heaven's high mandate, the HERO OF THE AGE has numbered with the dead—when the reverend sage, the angelic statesman the father of his country, has ceased his breath—When the life of an Illustrious Man, the property of distant nations, and the brightest ornament of human nature—When WASHINGTON IS NO MORE, is the source of the general sad to be confined to the limits of a general mourning; but let not the voice of talents and the testimony of foreigners, be inferior in the honor and fame of the deceased!

The shades of war worn veteran round him throng,
And bail, exempt, their honored Chief along!

A lasting wreath, of immortal leaves bears,
An arch triumphal Mercer's hand prepares,
Young Lavoisier, "seal'st avenging bolt of war,"

With port majestic guides the glittering car,
Montgomery's godlike form directs the way,
And Green unfolds the gates of endless day!
While Apollo, "strange-tongued" proclaim thro' air,
"Due honors for the First of Men prepare."

STAGE COACH TALES
By E. C. TAYLOR

Zachary Taylor Skids

PRESIDENT ZACHARY TAYLOR, "Old Zack," who had led the American army that chased Santa Anna through northern Mexico in the war with Mexico, ignored the dangers of travel by stage coach over the old National pike while he traveled to the inauguration of the armory.

With a party of statesmen, politicians and office-seekers, President Taylor rode over the road in 1849, between Cumberland and the Ohio river.

The party took to many specially chartered coaches. The identity of their drivers has never been exactly established but they were the pick of the drivers then operating on the road west of Cumberland, and probably included such famous characters as Henry Farnell, Nicole McNitt and Alfred Wild.

The Presidential party was under the marshalship of Thomas Shriver of Cumberland, that ardent Whig. Included in the party was Colonel Bullitt, Whig editor of New Orleans, who was the "Colonel Home" of the Taylor administration.

The party was a game of one, everything there ground was fiercely contested with the result that there was never a dull moment between President Taylor and his party on Cumberland.

To a southerner like President Taylor, who had never seen the like, it was a spectacle.

Going down a spur of the road from Meadow Mills, the Taylor party of coaches, along with all the others, flashed and bellowed on the national road feet in one side and then to the other, every natural thoroughfare to northern. But, in spite of the speed under the capable handling of the drivers.

Shriver was in one of the rear coaches and was greatly in fear for the safety of the President. As the coaches careened down each hill and ascended the next grade in the long, unpaved thoroughfare he whether of his coach was still upon the wheels.

The towering head of Zachary Taylor with almost the same frequency could be seen over the window of the Presidential coach. But Zachary Taylor was not trying to see after anybody but himself. He was enjoying the session to the an Arctic penguin.

After two years of this jolting and bruising along many hills and down many slopes, and everything was safe, then Shriver, after the Navional Armory matters were at chamberlayed, at twilight.

At the Shriver home is one of the celebrations given along the Atlantic coast. There Zachary Taylor seemed to have caused and ordered a halt. He got out in the snow and sleet and looked that weekend with godly beams at the sides of Wills creek, every twig of vegetation and every inch of ground covered with glistening ice.

He had himself declared that it is his life hatred, not even in the beautiful mountains of northern Mexico when he was with the van of the chivalry of Santa Anna.

It was more than an hour before the President would permit Shriver and the rest of the frightened party to resume their journey.

Finding New Plants

Monster Fig of Orotava, Half Grown.

MANY years of whole hearted devotion to the cause of botanic science, and especially to the study of economic plants, Alfredo V. Arnoso, patron of eight expeditions to find and bring into America from foreign countries new and valuable plants, is ready to satisfy our furious curiosities, was awarded the Thomas W. Morris medal for distinguished service in plant introduction.

The presentation was made by its gifted eponymous president at the National Geographic society, in Baltimore, home of the late Dr. Arnoso mother Gertrude Bell, now the wonderful confidante of Doctor and Mrs. Arnoso.

Mr. Arnoso's gold Elvanda medal, under the auspices of the United States Department of Agriculture, is carried on each expedition a staff of scientific experts chosen by the secretary of agriculture, the president of the National university, and the director of the National museum.

As described by Chauncey Juday, of the University of Wisconsin, who made the presentation address on behalf of the Morris medal committee, the Arnoso expeditions have covered all the world's continents. In native costume, they have penetrated to the interior of the countries they have visited, and have brought back to the United States many valuable new plants.

Among women with the courage to venture among savages and dangers with all kinds of hardships in their search for new plants, Mr. Arnoso has found his wife, Elvanda, who accompanies him on his expeditions. Dr. Juday described the dangers of their search for new plants in the following words:

"Among the hazards encountered by the members of the party are the following: Attacks by wild animals, poisonous insects and reptiles, poisonous plants, thorns and the diseases of the countries visited. Also there are dangers from earthquakes, as the Arnoso party was in Japan during the disastrous earthquake of 1923.

"Among the hardships encountered are the following: Long journeys on foot, by horseback, by mule back, by camel back, by dog sled, by ox cart, by native carts, by rickshaw, by automobile, by motor SELLING BLUE SKY FROM EUROPE

The various methods of dodging debts and reducing incomes now being adopted by European countries may have the good effect of causing Americans to be a little more cautious in future about investing their money in foreign enterprises and securities. The lesson comes a little late for the financial good of this country, but if it had not come within the last two years, it is hard to tell how many billions of American dollars would have been exported before the time of rude awakening.

England is about the last country in the world one would ever have thought would suspend the operations of the gold standard, which is only a mild method of invoking the bankruptcy laws. England's pride has long been her willingness to meet all obligations and maintain her credit. To England's credit be it said, that she was the one nation that walked up to the captain's desk and settled her debts to the last penny.

The proposal to establish a federal tax on There wasn't much good sense or justice in this government putting the stamp of approval on even partial repudiation of the debts to America by other European nations after England had settled in full, being granted only the favor of a low interest rate and a long time to pay.

Germany repudiated all domestic debts by inflation. Austria did the same. Italy and France thimble-rigged domestic debtors by sinking the value of the currency in which these debts are being made. At the same time they reduced wages and cut production costs so that foreign trade might be more easily acquired. The American people have been more or less victimized by all these jugglings. The loss of Americans in their German mark holdings alone was enormous.

Of course we have many Americans who get a good deal of enjoyment out of any scheme that is rigged up to pick Uncle Sam's pockets. To hear them talk you would think that the United States not only has no greivance, but that we really have been breaking the heart of the world in not signing over all our assets to foreign nations and asking for the appointment of a receiver for our depleted assets.

Nobody is feeling very sorry for those who should have known better, by this meaning the bankers who have been negotiating these deals, for whatever they may have lost. But the New York bankers have been unloading these European bluesky securities on hundreds of thousands of innocent investors in the United States. Hereafter bankers who sell foreign securities to American investors should be compelled to underwrite them. This would slow down the sale, but it would protect the innocent American investor, who cannot know the factors affecting the value of foreign securities.

UNCLE SAM HAS NOT BEEN IDLE

There is much ignorant complaint to the effect that the federal government has fallen down on the job of providing construction work during the period of unemployment.

In 1929 there was federal construction to the value of $250,100,000, in 1930 of $446,953,000, in 1931 of $738,567,000.

The number of men working on these national projects has increased from 180,000 in January 1930, to 760,000 in August 1931. It is expected that by January 1932, 850,000 men will be at work on federal projects.

Governor Roosevelt of New York, complaining that the federal government is doing nothing to relieve the situation, asked the state legislature for $20,000,000 to be used in the construction of public works. The expenditure from the federal treasury in New York State this year, on roads and other public works, will aggregate $45,000,000.

In no previous depression has the national government taken special interest in providing jobs for idle workmen. Not only has the government done all this directly, but it will be recalled that President Hoover has appealed to all employers, public and private, to do everything possible to provide additional work when it is most needed.

Perhaps the very magnitude of the public and private effort to avoid human privation during the present depression has served to advertise it and make the people more conscious of it. However that should not deter, and has not prevented the government from doing everything possible to take care of the situation.

During the last great depression, that of 1893 the soup-house was about the highest order of organized aid thought of. Tramps roamed the country in armies. The back-door hand-out was the means of preventing idle men from starving. It was every fellow for himself, and the devil take the hind-most. Times have changed, and the character of the American people has improved in forty years.

A FEDERAL GAS TAX

United States government after the World War, gasoline should center the attention of the public on the whole problem of gas taxation.

If a federal tax were levied, it would mean that eventually the total gas tax might even be doubled. Already the states have gone farther than is economically feasible in burdening the motorist. The average tax is now slightly in excess of four cents a gallon, and rates of five and six cents are becoming more common. In one state an eight-cent rate was defeated only by quick and decisive action on the part of the public. And rumblings of ten-cent rates are heard in the distance.

No other necessary and generally-used commodity is taxed so highly. Special and class taxes are always bad—and when allowed to grow to excessive proportions, they become economic monstrosities.

Shrines In American History

By JAMES W. BROOKS

PIONEER SHRINE IN KENTUCKY

Every turn at Harrodsburg, Kentucky is a page in pioneer life. The weather vane on the Courthouse clock—a woodsman in coonskin cap—will silently signal the traveler that he is coming into a land of romance and adventure. In the replica of Old Fort Harrod will be found household utensils of 1774, and a little school room with backless benches and three books—one a Bible—will grip the hearts of passersby. Truly, a pioneer shrine in American history!

There is, too, an added something about it that brings enthusiastic comments from every one who has ever driven a Ford . . . the joy it puts in motoring.

"I have been a car owner continuously for nearly 20 years," writes a motorist connected with a leading university. "During this period I have bought eleven new automobiles. Eight of the eleven were in the middle-price field, one cost three thousand dollars, and the last is a Ford I purchased thirteen months ago.

"In the light of this experience I can say in all sincerity that I have derived more genuine satisfaction from the Ford than any car I ever owned. In saying this, I am thinking in terms of comfort, safety, driving pleasure, ease of control and economy. My next car will also be a Ford because it will give me what I want at a price I can afford to pay."

When you get behind the wheel of the Ford and drive it yourself you will know it is a truly remarkable car at a low price. You will like it when you first buy it. You will become more and more enthusiastic the longer you drive it.

After thousands of miles of driving you will say "it's a great car." Its economy will save you many dollars.

HUMIDITY SECRET OF HOME COMFORT

AMERICAN home-owners on a city scale this cold autumn are endeavoring to create indoor comfort during the winter months season by establishing the thermometer at high readings. The fact is that the thermometer reading is a very unreliable guide to comfort, says the Holland Institute of Thermology, of Holland, Mich.

Most homes are heated with coal stove heating systems, and therefore endure a month of atmospheric torture before the indoor air, which by all theories was supposed to provide physical comfort. The result is that air is far too dry for either comfort or health. Due to lack of ventilation, the moist moisture somewhat adds because of moisture, overheated, dry air sets the result that even the best audio properties are irritating.

Often persons in these dry, poorly heated rooms experience a sensation of chilliness. This is explained in the fact that evaporation causes a feeling of coolness. Dry air has an affinity for moisture and draws moist away from organs possible, to supply its moisture requirements, including the organisms of a room. They are supposed to an additional sensation of health, sometimes and this causes that chilly feeling in "our bones."

Just quite accurately comfortable cooling indoor atmosphere may be had by every homeowner during the winter season, and in fact of practically free to maintain temperatures of 70 degrees F., as found by many homes they found maintained temperatures of only 60 degrees. With modern warm air heating systems of the type in use, the operation de-humidifying of moist air is easily accomplished by the addition of a humidifier and vaporizer that is adaptable to either the round or square furnace casing. These vaporizers are simply constructed of sheet metal and have a capacity of from one to five gallons of water every 24 hours. They are operated by the heat of the furnace and require no attention other than refilling with water. Their cost is also low, ranging from $5 to $10 for the average home.

Humidifiers are also made in portable types for use in rooms where there is no furnace heat. These are usually electrically operated and have a capacity of about one gallon of water every 24 hours. They are also made in the form of a vase, and are ornamental as well as useful.

Honoring of parents or other worthy forbears is most commendable, but the extremes to which some people carry their pride of ancestry is sometimes amusing.

We see many worthless offspring from high-class parentage, while on the other hand many persons born in obscurity have made notable successes in life.

While the fetish of ancestry is still worshipped by many, it is becoming out of date and nowadays a man must contribute something in his own right if he would be held in high esteem.

On a night of moon-madness in old New Orleans, Loren Garde, destined by Norse and French ancestry to be a child of devil-may-care, crosses blades with a masquerading nobleman in the sight of Dulce of the purple eyes. That is the end of his tranquillity and the beginning of many things. Such a man is a wildcat in fight and a tempest in love.

A realization of the terrible blow which has just fallen upon the good people of the west is impossible. The press of the entire country is filled with accounts of the disaster, the suffering and destitution of the afflicted citizens has been pictured, but we fail to realize the awful extent. Chicago, the great, has fallen!! We cannot begin to estimate the extent of its calamity. Every heart and hearth will feel the shock, and the nation is momentarily pained by the holocaust. STANDARD RED CROWN

HERE is the news you've been waiting for—hoping for—wondering whether you'd hear it this year or next. The news of a NEW GASOLINE—a BETTER GASOLINE. Mark that last phrase! The which is new is not always better. But Standard Red Crown is NEW and BETTER. We introduce it to you as the best all-purpose gasoline ever put on the market. And we've anticipated some of the questions you'll want to ask about this brilliant, sparkling, modern fuel. From now on you'll hear plenty about Standard Red Crown—plenty of praise for a fuel that gives you more for your money—easy starting—more power—more performance—more miles.

Read these questions and answers—and then drive to the nearest STANDARD RED CROWN sign—for your first filling of "The Better Gasoline"

What is Standard Red Crown, the Better Gasoline?
A gasoline in which the fractions are so adjusted to weather conditions as to give a smooth flow of power at any season of the year.

What are fractions in Gasoline?
They're the compounds taken from petroleum each of which vaporizes within definite temperature limits. The skillful merging of these fractions and adjusting the proportions to meet different weather conditions make good gasoline.

What happens if these fractions are not properly adjusted? The engine may perform satisfactorily under one set of conditions but not all. For example, in winter good gasoline requires large amounts of light ends to give quick starting and satisfactory performance, but in summer too much of these light ends causes vapor lock troubles.

Is Standard Red Crown a natural product?
No. Nature is not concerned with producing an ideal gasoline for automobiles. It must be made by skillful men. Standard Red Crown owes much of its anti-knock value to the use of the improved cracking processes developed by the Standard Oil Company (Indiana).

How is Standard Red Crown made?
Under processes developed in the research laboratories of the Standard Oil Company (Indiana) utilizing the tremendous refining facilities of this organization.

Is Standard Red Crown a NEW Gasoline?
Yes. It has just been put on the market.

Why do you recommend it for winter driving?
Because it starts easily and accelerates smoothly and because it can be depended upon to operate smoothly in the engine and deliver a rhythmic flow of tremendous power.

Why is Standard Red Crown recommended for 1931-32 cars? Because it is designed to respond to the delicate adjustment of the latest type engines—because it performs better in the older types—because it burns clean at any speed—because it's priced to meet current economic conditions. It gives maximum performance at a moderate price.

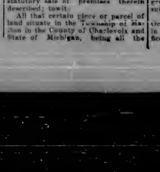
ALL AMERICA NOW RIDING THE GOAT

Popular Mohair Upholstery Made Only From Hair of the Angora.

The subject is usually associated with snow or the Middle-east institution of matrimony but oil you know that still lines of persons have been "riding the goat" on the railroads and have been enjoying the ride.

Every time you ride in a railroad car upholstered in genuine mohair you are casually "riding the goat" for the mohair is the fleece of the Angora goat, not cloth, cows or any other of the many strange products that most persons erroneously associate with mohair. There are many reasons why this material was chosen and has been so widely used on the railroad and some of them are unusually interesting because it has taken modern scientific methods to reveal them and they are new. For years people have known that mohair must be a good material or the railroads would not use such large quantities of it. Its more durability and fast colors are by no means the only reasons why it is popular.



The Angora Goat.

Here is one important factor that makes genuine mohair so popular for railroad and auto upholstery usage. The fine, wool fibers of the goat's hair actually mesh with the clothing of the person in the seat and so help to hold him in a comfortable position and to keep him from slipping off the seat in case of a sudden stop.

At first thought, this does not seem to be so important but it is a vital safety factor, especially in the case of old persons and small children and if you have ever tried to keep a comfortable position in a chair that was too big for you and was covered with the old-fashioned horse hair, for instance, you'll realize know how pleasant it is to feel the strong, friendly little fibers of the mohair, holding you in place.

Then, another reason why make the cloth fill slides we do some other materials it also has some wear on them and these are important points in the mind of the traveling man especially as he would find his value little somewhat stiff higher if he had to ride on hard, smooth seats on all his journeys.

Every service man and woman knows how easily real mohair is cleaned with the various cleaner has chiefly wash and should not be removed and how long an material looks after it has been given a thorough washing and cleaning.

Just recently improved processes of weaving have been developed so that modern processes in the mills produce than ever. There are now about 250,000 Angoras, goats in the country and the United States is the largest producer of angora goats. Mohair fabrics as well as upholstered cushions are visiting the goat on the ranches of herds of mohair goats and in the mohair upholstery. The company is also finding wide expansion in its plants whose output are specialized in durable tailored shirting material for beauty, economy and greater comfort.

MOHAIR IS GIVEN 'TUG O' WAR' TEST

Angora Goat Hair Used in Velmo Must Stand a Severe "Pull."

Behind the scenes at Sanford Mills Sanford, Me., the home of many velvet or velour as it is generally known, are strange looking machines and devices of various sorts for testing the fibers before they are woven into upholstery for your fireplace and automobile.

One of these is a stringent mohair Mohair fibers the hairs of the Angora goat are similar between the two small spools seems a small bit; a lever is released and the spools slowly draw apart while a small wrists on the inner object a record of the amount of cloth being exerted on the fibers. When the needle on the big dial has swung far around the fibers will begin to break and the test is over.

This "tug of war" is applied to the fibers to make sure that no small threads enter into the manufacture of the upholsterers and other fabrics destined for years of hard service on automobile seats, railroad cushions and scores of other such things of the companies rigid testing apparatus to apply their own tests to before they materials go to the upholsterer, they have passed through so many different tests, long and relatively painful and freedom from deterioration.

In addition to the pulling test, these are chemical tests to prove that the dyes used in velmo will not run when the goods are subjected to perspiration or other moisture there are rubbing tests to prove how long the every fibers of velmo will last and there are other color tests to show that mohair is little likely to fade.

Samples of dyed mohair are left out in the sun for months and then compared on the new materials to show that the colors have not faded. When more rapid results are needed, powerful lights with rays like those of the sun eight in a few hours the equivalent to many days of exposure to the sunshine to show that the velmo colors retain their natural hues after long service.

We suggest the propriety of the parents of the village meeting at the postoffice this evening to take into consideration the organization of a select school for the younger portion of the school attendants. It must be evident to all that the present school building is wholly inadequate to the wants of this school district. The idea of one mortal governing a heterogeneous mass of juveniles in our small school room is ridiculous; and for the good of the four-year-olds we suggest this meeting.

Sales of timber from the National Forests have been curtailed to help relieve depression in the lumber industry.

WOOD WISDOM
If you buy home materials at home and there is anything wrong, you can get hold of the manufacturer at once and get things adjusted. Not so easy if you are dealing with a stranger at a distance. Worth thinking about. Ask the fellow who has had trouble.

If you know you are right and admit you are wrong—you are married.

Yes, you have heard about the fellow who let a match to see if his tank was empty and found it wasn't; also the fellow who raced to the crossing to beat the train, but didn't. Did you hear of your neighbor who bought a new roof from a smooth stranger from the big city, thinking it was better than Moy Hide, and soon found to his grief that it wasn't? It takes only a little investigation at home to make sure before investing, and it costs no more.

A customer demands the best from his local dealer and goes by him to charge for six months or so and it is there when it comes, parts an adjustment. The place where he can get all of that is the place to trade.

Though Mule-Hide roofing is beautiful in its range of colors, the greatest beauty about it is its dependability. Every bit of it carries a double guarantee. Better let us explain to you what that means. It won't cost you a cent to hear about it.

The Vale of Aragon

By FRED McLAUGHLIN

In this story by the author of "The Blade of Peardy," romance and high adventure perform their parts against a background of authentic history. It is a rare tale of the early Nineteenth century; of the revolution in Venezuela, when the indomitable Bolivar—another George Washington—played his immortal role in the annals of South America.

Stage Manager—Virginia Nickerson.
At an early date other members of the club will present other amusing plays.

Junior Play
The Junior Class affair long deliberation and thought and consultation with members of the faculty and townspeople have decided on a difficult play but one which they feel sure will be a successful venture.
In choosing this play they have departed from the customs of the past years by selecting one which ranks high in literary value and furthermore is a tragedy.
Channing Pollock's "The Enemy" without harrowing feelings, shows the futility of war, and that man's greatest enemy is not a brother we can just hatred. Patriot points we think the goal of all the world should be love tolerance, and peace.
The cast will be chosen and rehearsals begun at an early date.

Kindergarten
The boys and girls of the kindergarten have just finished building a log that would do credit to a real woodsman.
The grown boat has a coal pilot house and within the pilot sits at the wheel and a little chair in which the pilot may sit. The cabin of the boat is large enough to afford room for six little chairs and there six boat passengers. There are two black smoke stacks on the cabin and the boat flies the American colors, both fore and aft. The ship, the Stickabout, rests on the fire engine, very tastefully by blue paper with the waves marked in white chalk. But there is no danger of any passengers being lost for the boat boasts a life boat and four life savers.
And to make the picture complete, the gang planks extend from the boat to land.

Physical Training
The Junior High girls have started training to clog and they are progressing finely.
Next week the Junior High boys will start their "Socker" ball games. Splendid material for a splendid team and they will play against the ninth grade boys.

Grades Entertained
Last Monday morning the 4th, 5th, and 6th grades had the pleasure of listening to President Hoover over the radio. The grades enjoyed the speech and consider it a great honor to be able to listen to our President.

Manual Arts
The Manual Arts boys are coming along nicely on some of their projects. Boys are selecting jobs to be both useful and ornamental around the home. They are constructing tea cart stands, taborets, dressingtrays and other useful and ornamental articles.
The Manual Arts room is neatly completed, some minor work being done by the students who are very much interested in the finishing pleasure of the work.

Football
Saturday's football game certainly proved to be a splendid success for our football team. The game was very interesting for the few fans who turned out to witness it.
The Charlevoix boys fought a terrific battle with the Cheboygan team scoring and a number of fans who had started to line boys.
The game was fast and furious from the first whistle to the final gun. Cheboygan started out with a bang and carried the ball over for a touchdown in the first period and another in the second, making the extra point. But this ended their scoring. The home team came out for the last half and they seemed recuperated. Their plays clicked, passes worked and as a whole, they displayed somewhat superior playing to that in the first quarter of the season. Two beautiful long passes were completed, Amo to Rose Both for fifty yards. Another added about 30 yards more when Davenport caught a nice one and carried it for a gain.
Cheboygan was held scoreless in the last half and did not gain yardage to speak of. Our men were in for all the tackles, which ended in a loss at yardage for Cheboygan.
All in all, the score, 14-0, does not mean so very much when one takes into consideration the excellent comeback our team staged.
A great pep meeting preceded the big Cheboygan-Charlevoix game last Friday. Coach Kipke gave a good talk about the team, and our new cheer leaders, Junior Superman and Marion Tuby showed what they can do in the line of getting the game going.

Here's a Hot Point! When we're not cooking to be done the new stove in our Home Economics room is one. The Domestic Science girls tell us that it bakes delicious cookies.

The Junior Class Ring Committee is composed of Lila Tillotson, Dorothy Straley, John Wunder and Jane Striker. They promise the best looking rings to be seen in any class.

Miss Ingham "Norman, we'll have from you now. I suppose you read them aloud, as I instructed?"
Norman Amo: "No ma'am, I tried to but they wouldn't let me in the assembly."

ACHIEVEMENT DAY SUCCESS

OVER THREE HUNDRED SAW SPLENDID EXHIBITS

The Fall Achievement Day held in the East Jordan High School Auditorium on Friday evening, October 23 was most wonderful in all respects. This year for the first time the work with the juniors in the county was merged together which made a most attractive display. The South Hughes boys of East Jordan High School displayed their potatoes and apples in great number. Very attractive in design and artistically arranged was a huge map of the Shift District of Michigan made out of apples.

The exhibit of the Home Economics Department received much favorable comment from the large audience. The canned goods on display were too wonderful to describe. The Manual training department likewise exhibited the fine work accomplished by the club members. Special praise must be extended to the posters exhibits that represented such a huge amount of effort on the part of the exhibitors. In this class two boys, Gwendon Holt and Albert Omlaer both of East Jordan, had a tight fight to the finish when it came to selecting the best exhibit. Finally, however Mr. Kenneth Oesterhout, County Agent of Antrim County, decided in favor of Gwendon Holt for first place. Third place was won by Fern Harvey, East Jordan, and fourth place by Ernest Rude, also of East Jordan. It is to be regretted that more folks did not have the opportunity of viewing the high quality exhibits that were on display.

In the white team we had more competition than in any other class. Finally when the smoke of battle had blown over, Charles Hawthorn of Charlevoix was declared the first place winner in competition with ten entries in this class. Second place went to Stanley Jensen, Walloon Lake, third place to Opal Gregory, Bay Shore, and fourth to Barbara Evers, also of Bay Shore.

In the red kidney bean class four entries were in the block of battle. First place was won by Howard McDonald, Ellsworth; second place, Willims Jenkins, Boyne City; and third place to Lewis Laurie, Boyne City.

In the golden glow corn class two samples were on display. The one shown by Clayton Healey of East Jordan was a very wonderful display of corn and would go a long way in any Show. Second place was awarded to George Jones of Boyne City.

A very splendid program added to the enjoyment of the evening and was indeed very well balanced. Bill Bush, Superintendent of Schools of Charlevoix, gave a very wonderful address, touching many educational problems of the present time and their relationship in building character. Mr. Otis, Superintendent of the school at Williamsburg, also appeared on the program and in very few words gave a summary of the progress of the Smith-Hughes project work as carried on in the East Jordan Public Schools, as well as throughout the state. He named the winners of the Smith-Hughes competition. The Home Economics Department more than held their own by furnishing one of two very enjoyable plays. Music by the Glee Club and Orchestra all combined to make this evening one of great inspiration to all in attendance, and will do much toward staging a similar program another year.

Yours very truly,
B. C. Mellenkamp,
Co. Agr. Agt.

HALLOWE'EN PARTY
AT TRAVERSE CITY

East Jordan's little German band will be very big attractions at a Community Hallowe'en Party in Traverse City Saturday. The comedy band made a big hit at the Cherry Festival in July and was called back for Traverse City's autumn celebration. Two other bands will give concerts during the day.

Twenty three prizes, including a first prize of $10, are offered in a jack-o'-lantern contest in which all children living outside of Traverse City are eligible. The jack-o'-lanterns must be brought to the Park Place hotel in Traverse City by 4:00 p. m. (e.s.t.). All children are eligible for a costume parade at 6:30 p. m.

Among the attractions for the day will be a free show given by the community theatre at 10:00 a. m., on which Walter Hastings, the department's famous entertainer, will describe some of the scenes in his movies.

Mid-week Service, Thurs. 7:30.
Ironton— E. S. T.
Morning Worship, 10:30.
Church School, 11:30.
Young Peoples Service, 8:00.
Starting next Sunday, November 1, the pastor will begin a series of sermons on the general theme "The Ten Commandments." The subject for the sermon next Sunday will be "An Introduction to the Ten Commandments." Hr. Wm. L. Stidger, a leading preacher in the Methodist Episcopal Church, together with other church leaders, believes that "the hour has struck when we must begin a period of re-emphasis upon the sanctions of the individual." The truth of the statement is apparent. The preaching of the past 15 or 20 years has tried to make religion interesting and pleasant at the expense of teaching the underlying principles of the Christian life. It is with this thought in mind that we introduce the Commandments.
By these statements we are not inferring that Charlevoix or Ironton lack understanding, neither do we infer that former pastors have been lax. Our chief interest is to call attention to and bring to remembrance those things already known. As Peter, in the Bible-tion so his second letter, suggests that he would be negligent if he failed to always put his friends in remembrance of things they already knew, that they might be established in the truth. These sermons will not be controversial, but the setting forth, in a straight forward manner, simple Christian truths bearing in mind always that we have all come short of the glory of God. We urge that you will not miss one of these aerial numbers.

Thursday, November 5th, Miss Ruth Isabel Seabury of Boston will address the Sunday School Workers Conference at its monthly get-together supper and program. She is Secretary of Missionary Education for the A. R. C. F. M. She comes with first hand information. She is spoken of as "a woman of exceedingly attractive personality", "she is the best". "She is witty, quiet, thoroughly informed and will command the attention and sustained interest of any group, old or young, male or female.", "Those who have heard her speak are clamorous for return engagements." Miss Seabury will speak before the Ironton church Thursday afternoon.

We are introducing something new for our Mid-Week service seriously. Beginning this Thursday evening besides the regular Bible lesson we are to review, chapter by chapter, the book, "Pathways to the Reality of God" by Dr. Rufus M. Jones. This book is advertised as much if not more than any recent book. Come for the first chapter this Thursday night.

COMEDY PARTS TO SCRIPT WRITING, GRIFFITH'S PATH

Raymond Griffith, who was a comedian of the first order when the screen had no voice, is about to achieve fame in a new field.
Griffith is now a scenario writer.
His first important work as a maker of scripts is in "The Beloved Bachelor," the comedy romance featuring Paul Lukas, Dorothy Jordan, Charlie Ruggles and Vivienne Osborne, which opens at the Palace Theatre in next Wednesday for two days.
"The Beloved Bachelor" is a movie adaptation of a play by Edward H. Peplos. The story has to do with the life of a young San Francisco sculptor, played by Lukas. He falls in love in his youth with a beautiful actress. Because of a misunderstanding the actress, Vivienne Osborne, forsakes him for another man, and gets married.
Meanwhile, Lukas has adopted the orphaned daughter of a woman who had once been a model for his early sculptures.
A period of 12 years elapses, and Ruth, the child he has adopted, is now a young woman (Dorothy Jordan), who is beginning to have her affection with an intense romantic fervor. Lukas has become famous—but he is not happy, for he has never gotten his affection for the actress.
On the occasion of the anveiling of his most recent statue, Miss Osborne is present. She too, has not forgotten their earlier affair. Their friendship is renewed. The reconciliation arouses the youthful jealousy of Dorothy, who takes extra measures to appear Lukes of her own love for him.
This triangular situation is finally solved by a series of appealing and very human incidents.

C. H. S. Athletic Rating
For the school year 1929-1930, approved officials have rated high schools with which they have come in contact in officiating football and basketball games. As a result, Michigan schoolmen were given an idea of the standing of their schools in administration and sportsmanship. The general plan of rating was thus: 1. Excellent 2. Good. 3. Average. 4. Below Average, 5. Very Poor. Those schools with average ratings in administration and sportsmanship were 1.5 or less are listed on the honor roll. The failure of a school's name to appear on the honor roll may be due to one of two things—first, the average rating of the school may be greater than 1.5; or second, a school may not have been rated by any official.
Charlevoix took her place on the honor roll. In football we were rated by three officials and in basketball by 7 officials. The official ratings of Charlevoix High School in football were as follows:
ADMINISTRATION—Correspondence, 1. Functioning, 1. Game Preparation, 1.5. Control of Players, 1. Control of Spectators, 1.6. Average rating in Administration 1.2.
SPORTSMANSHIP — Coaches, 1. Other school officials, 1. Players, 1. Spectators, 2. Average rating in Sportsmanship, 1.2.
So we may see, the ratings of C. H. S. in football were fairly good. And we may safely venture to say that next year it will be better for the fault found in the Spectators has been remedied. The fences have been placed around the field so that no one but the football players, the referees and linemen may be inside. This will undoubtedly raise the standard of Charlevoix in both Administration and Sportsmanship.

Football
The game with Boyne last Saturday was rather a fashionable for Charlevoix's hopes of attaining high honors in the Northern Michigan Football Conference.
Many fans had expectations of seeing the famous "jinx" broken which has held sway in favor of Boyne for the past five or six years, but hope faded as the last few minutes of the game clicked by with the score 7 to 0 in favor of Boyne.
The touchdown for Boyne was made in the first quarter, when Charlevoix was deep in their own territory. Charlevoix punted, but the ball went high but with no distance, due to the strong wind which continued throughout the game, was blocked during bad-less honors.

OIL STATION PROPRIETOR INJURED IN FRACAS

Something of a mixup was indulged in at the Sunoco gas station when a young man, Arden Dennis, attempted to drive away from the station Tuesday night without paying for gas that he had bought of Mr. Hansen, owner of the filling station.
Before the affair was over with Mr. Hansen put up a regular scrap, at the same time took a severe beating, such as necessitated calling a doctor to treat the injuries received. The case probably will be heard later in the courts.
A warrant in which young Dinon is charged with assault with intent to do great bodily harm less than murder was issued Wednesday, but had not been served at an early hour today as the defendant had not been located by Sheriff Vaughan.

SHAKESPEARE STUDY CLUB MEETS AT EAST JORDAN

There were eighteen members in attendance and following the regular study program, the gathering became a tea party, which was very much enjoyed.

State troopers, Kenneth Cook and Harry Kozowics from Cheboygan headquarters, were here Wednesday, their mission having something to do with locating a man who has been passing worthless checks at various points in this region. Cashing of accepting checks presented by strangers has always been accompanied by more or less financial loss but never more treacherous than at the present time.

Mr. and Mrs. George W. Porter spent the week end as guests of Mr. and Mrs. William Knight at their farm home in Banks township.

PUTS HOLLYWOOD AHEAD OF PARIS AS STYLE ARBITER

Motion pictures are more influential in dictating the styles of the world than are the Parisian designers, says Lilian Tashman, one of the best-dressed women on the screen and the co-starer with Kay Francis of the title role of "Girls About Town," which comes to the Palace Theatre on Saturday and Sunday.
"Styles of feminine clothing and styles of interior decoration are ruled by what appears on the screen," Miss Tashman says. "I know that this is true because of the response following the release of every picture.
"The well-dressed woman receives requests for patterns and photographs and the studio is asked for plans of settings and information as to where decorations and furnishings can be duplicated."
Many furniture and novelty manufacturers take advantage of this style- setting to manufacture popular items for general sale, according to A. E. Freudeman, head of the Paramount set dressing department.
Scores of new items of decoration and furnishing will be seen in "Girls About Town," modern New York comedy in which Kay Francis, Joel McCrea, and Miss Tashman appear, he said. "The studio does not bother to patent furniture with the result that styles are generally copied. The large room and the high backed chair have been adopted in homes after the studio introduced them to give the impression of spaciousness and luxury."

Mrs. A. K. Wood drove to Saginaw Sunday, where she spent the early part of the week with relatives and friends, returning home Wednesday. Mrs. S. M. Hite accompanied Mrs. Wood on the trip.

CHANGE MADE IN CREDIT BUREAU

A change made this week at the Charlevoix Credit Association places William P. Hickey in the office as the head and manager of that organization, who, in the future, will have full charge of its business affairs.
Mr. Hickey is an exceptionally good office man. He has had extensive experience, is well versed in business affairs, has the full confidence of the public and will no doubt conduct the office successfully as well as most satisfactorily in the interest of everyone concerned.
The Credit Association office will be located at the corner of Park Avenue and Bridge Streets, in the Bingham block, over the Daily Grill Shop, where Mr. Hickey can be reached during business hours.

Members of Charlevoix Lodge No. 282 F. & A. M. have arranged to attend a special communication with the East Jordan brethren at their temple tonight as also will members of the order from Boyne City. Later the members of the three lodges will meet in Boyne City and Charlevoix. The dates for the later meetings have not been definitely declared at this time.

An enclosed car returning from the north, passed through on US-31 early this morning, that carried a large black bear and a big buck, probably taken in Canada, where the season is on for big game shooting.

Fred Alberts, for some time past a student manager of the local credit association bureau, retires from that position and will hereafter live in Traverse City.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Routley of Traverse City, spent two or three days early this week here, guests of Mr. and Mrs. Matt Routley.

FAREWELL DINNER GIVEN BY MR. AND MRS. F. C. NAGLE

Mr. and Mrs. Frank C. Nagle of Alamagozo, New Mexico, who have been spending part of the summer visiting friends and relatives in Charlevoix, gave a farewell dinner at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Edwards of Ferry Ave. Monday night.
Among those present were Mrs. Iola Chaffee, Mrs. Julia Cram, Mr. and Mrs. Alvan Webster, Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Paddock, Mr. and Mrs. H. O. Cram, Mrs. Margarita Cram and children, Mr. and Mrs. Clair Webster and Mrs. S. A. Brown.
Mrs. Nagle was the former Eva Cram, who attended grammar and high school in Charlevoix. The young Mr. Nagle's first visit to Northern Michigan, he was very much impressed by the wonderful scenery, especially with the great quantities of water.
Mr. and Mrs. Nagle left Charlevoix Wednesday morning by auto for their home in Alamagordo, New Mexico, expecting to make the trip in about ten days.

SOMETHING NEW HERE IN CHURCH SYSTEMS

What will be different, or at least variously, not only the special group interested, but to many others in this city, is being put on as a special financial system in one of the churches.
There are many church people in Charlevoix, and all are interested in church business and methods and systems. Many churches have a budget system, or some at all. Some people have smilingly declared that it was the greatest proof of the divine character of the church, that it continued to live and flourish, with many of the usual systems. The local Methodist Church is employing a Board of Equalization and Board of Review and those have had five evening sessions, to carefully analyze the whole matter of church finance, studying not only the whole matter of church expense, both local and general, but this expense in relation to all the personal resources in the church. The last two sessions acted as Boards of Review. The entire Methodist membership, have a homecoming and rally, with a supper at six-thirty, one week from next Monday, Nov. 9. Fine programme and welcome to the new pastor and his wife.

Service Every Wednesday at 7:45 p. m.
Reading Room Tuesday and Saturday 3:00 to 5:00 p. m.
The public is cordially invited to attend our services and use our reading room.
Subject: Everlasting Punishment.
An unanimous invitation was given by the ministers of the city recently to Rev. W. W. Hurd, the new pastor of the local Methodist church.
There are many church people in Charlevoix, and all are interested in church business and methods and systems. Many churches have a budget system, or some at all. Some people have smilingly declared that it was the greatest proof of the divine character of the church, that it continued to live and flourish, with many of the usual systems. The local Methodist Church is employing a Board of Equalization and Board of Review and those have had five evening sessions, to carefully analyze the whole matter of church finance, studying not only the whole matter of church expense, both local and general, but this expense in relation to all the personal resources in the church. The last two sessions acted as Boards of Review. The entire Methodist membership, have a homecoming and rally, with a supper at six-thirty, one week from next Monday, Nov. 9. Fine programme and welcome to the new pastor and his wife.

PLANNING FOR HUNTING SEASON

SPORTSMEN PREPARE FOR OPENING OF SEASON NOV. 15

The lull of the wild is making its usual appeal to local sportsmen. As a result hunting parties are forming and all preparatory arrangements for the big game hunting are perfecting their organization for the 1931 sporting event.
The season opens November 15 and continues to and including November 30, during which period, provided you have a proper license, you can carry a rifle or shotgun in unrestricted territory, roam through the big woods, camp and shoot unprotected game or just enjoy your outing as seems best and proper all of course under legal provisions.
A recent survey made by the department of Conservation just released to the public carries the information that approximately 400 hunters who have violated regulations promulgated by the department will be denied the privilege of securing a license for this season. However, they anticipate the sale of 80,000 licenses to hunters of big game.
The state highway department, commencing with November 10, will operate three ferry boats on the Mackinaw City-St. Ignace route for the benefit of hunters making the trip from points below to points above the straits. The three ships will remain on the job, service daily on a will schedule, making as frequent and many trips as possible, day and night, according to information from the department and continuing the service as long as navigation is open. The service until the close of the season, or until such time as conditions warrant a reduction of the service established for the convenience of big game hunters.

The local scout troop of Charlevoix recently held its meeting in the high school gymnasium.
With Mr. Lockyer and Hosen Norgaard gone we have two new assistant scoutmasters to take their places—Harold Jones and Walker Miles.
The troop now has about forty-three members—enough for four fine patrols. The patrols are as follows: Beavers, Flying Eagles, Crows, Sea Hawks and the Wolverines.
Monday night the Wolverine Patrol was fully organized. The patrol leader elected was Bob Emery, with George Kelderhouse as assistant patrol leader.
The patrols have each organized a basketball team, Patrol No. 4, the Sea Gulls, seem to have the strongest team. It is followed closely by the Beavers and the Flying Eagles.

Two Notable November Indian Battles.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

THE approach of November brings with it the anniversaries of two battles which fix its place in the long history of the wars with the Indians. On November 7, 1811, one hundred and forty years ago, the Indians aroused one of their greatest surrenders against the white guns and tomahawks brought a sad ending to the military career of an officer who had made an honorable record in the Revolution. Twenty years later, on November 7, the situation was reversed. This time it was the white men who were victorious and the settlers started their leader on the road which led to the White House. The two battles mark the defeat of Gen. Arthur St. Clair on the headwaters of the Wabash river in 1791, and the victory of Gen. William Henry Harrison at Tippecanoe creek in Indiana on November 7, 1811.

Time St. Clair defeat was the climax of a futile two years' campaign to suppress and settle forever permanently to subdue the tribes of the old Northwest which had been making bloody havoc among the white men and settlers. The expedition of 320 regulars and 1,000 Pennsylvania and Kentucky militia, led by Gen. Josiah Harmar, had been sent against the Indians in the late fall of 1790.

Near the Maumee Indian river in what is now in the Northwest in armed bid for peace. No sooner were the troops well organized and ready for the campaign than they were opposed by the Indians. This time Harmar marched against the Miami villages on the Maumee river. He destroyed them and returned to Fort Washington. But on the way back he was attacked by the Indians and suffered a severe defeat. Harmar was disgraced and resigned from the army.

Then St. Clair was sent to the scene of a futile campaign. He organized and equipped an

FORECASTING POLITICAL WEATHER

Of course it is a little early to predict 1932 results. But the political forecasters have been lines all summer, trying to appraise the possibilities. Party leaders themselves have spent the past three months trying to find out where they stand, and they are surprisingly far from agreeing on any of the fundamentals of the situation.

The other day two men active in national affairs each wrote down, independently of each other, the list of states that the Republican party might carry in the next national election. They agreed in listing the same eight states as the only ones in which Republican prospects were entirely satisfactory.

A Washington correspondent suggests that "the greatest political overturn that has ever taken place has occured since the last national election."

However, if straws are what shows the direction of the wind, it must be admitted that all the present straws are economic rather than political. Depression, unemployment and financial difficulty hold the stage. When a man is asked how the political situation looks in his district, he is quite likely to reply in terms like those of the following letter quoted recently by a Washington correspondent as a report on political conditions in a certain important state:

"We are in a most distressing condition in this section. While we harvested an unusual crop of wheat and oats and have the best corn prospect in many years, our banks continue to tumble over, credit facilities are practically nil, farms are being foreclosed, mercantile establishments are failing, and a cloud of gloom envelops the country. Many of our most substantial farmers have gone broke."

All of which goes to prove merely that at this moment the nation is preoccupied with its economic difficulties, and can hardly be expected to talk politics except in terms of its preoccupations. The winter and spring may bring important changes in the business situation; if so, many voters will come out of their present fog.

KEEPING FAITH WITH BANKS

The news that "the bank has failed" has swept through hundreds of towns and cities within the past year, and the people of these communities have been fairly crushed by these financial tragedies.

Most of these banks were normally—and morally—solvent. In financing their customers and communities the bankers had loaned money on securities that they have not been able to rediscount, or borrow on for more than two years. When the published reports of the banks showed a decrease in deposits, the bankers found that their customers increased their withdrawals. The result was that, after awhile, these banks were compelled to close. The closing of every bank has brought disaster to the community in which it was located.

The Hoover $500,000,000 banking plan simply means that the banks of the country will be able to borrow from the huge financial organization on their real estate mortgages, bonds and other securities that have become "frozen assets." These securities are perfectly good. The bankers accepted them in "good times" to help finance the industries and business institutions of their cities.

The banker on the brink of failure because his bank may have—say $25,000 worth of such paper—is to be given the opportunity to get the cash from the big national institution by turning over these securities.

That's keeping faith with the banks. It is in substance, the Hoover plan which will make between three and four billion dollars of new credit available to American bankers.

That's real "confidence." Whether it is regarded as the biggest thing that has happened, disregard. Employment is the cure for the dole—and for the destruction of character and pride which the dole causes. Industrial leaders are now working on the problem, and several great businesses have instituted cures for unemployment within their organizations. Every business should do likewise, so far as it is able, and every citizen should do his bit to keep the need for the dole away from American shores.

ANOTHER LEAGUE FAILURE

No better example of the lack of potency of the League of Nations as an instrument of peace has ever been furnished a suffering world than the present situation in China. The Japanese continue their penetration of Chinese territory, and all efforts at inducing a withdrawal of Japanese troops have been in vain. The Japanese have paid no attention whatever to League influence and continue to do as they please with regard to China. Appeals of the Chinese to the League for help have been unavailing. The situation is constantly growing more serious and there are alarming reports to the effect that opposition in China to the Nanking government is increasing, because of its inability to stem the Japanese rush, and that there is danger that the government will fall and be succeeded by one more radical, and one which may seek an alliance with Soviet Russia against the Japanese.

Small wonder then that politicians here and in Europe regard the present situation as another serious blow at the prestige of the League. The League is everywhere being charged with weakness, and there is criticism all over Europe.

Writing of the situation, and of the Council of the League, the Geneva correspondent of the New York Times said recently:

"Severe criticism of the Council continues. The fact that a prominent member of the Council, without making any attempt to settle a dispute by the peaceful means it pledged to follow, should have been able to take the law in its own hands and resort to military methods at the very moment both the League Assembly and Council are meeting, without the Council taking any stronger action than it did, has clearly roused a great deal of European doubt and suspicion of the efficiency of the peace machinery."

The failure of the League to do anything about the Sino-Japanese situation, following the political lineup of the League Court on the Austro-German customs pact cannot help undermining confidence in these two institutions so far as American opinion is concerned. Things are not breaking well for the internationalists who would like to tie the people of the United States up with European political log rolling.

SHALL WE GO DOWN WITH THEM?

During recent months we have had held up before us, in pleas for further sacrifice of American welfare to European interest, that unless we were willing to place on the backs of this country the whole weight of the shaky European financial structure, it would collapse and crush us.

Perhaps these predictions are done in shades too dark. But if that is the real situation, the better position for our government to take would be to see to it that if Europe is bent for disaster, we are not carried down with it. It is entirely unnecessary that we should be, for this nation is a self contained area which does nearly ninety-five per cent of its business within its own borders.

And if our international bankers have so far involved themselves in European finance that they are more interested in its stability than in our own, then it is time that they should begin to withdraw and take their losses, rather than that they should ask the American people to further underwrite their foreign adventures. The government of the United States, too, has some power, and possibly it should be exerted through the vigorous wielding of a big stick.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

There was a great deal of significance in the enthusiastic way in which the public, including the politicians and statesmen, as well as the financiers, greeted the announcement of President Hoover's national economic plan. Likewise there was great significance in the cool manner in which was received the rumor that a proposition for debt cancellation was in the offing, a rumor which, fortunately, was dispelled by a statement from the White House.

It has been generally recognized and admitted that if the world is to get out of its depression, the start must be made in the United States. And it is generally being conceded that the President's plan for restoring banking confidence, is the first step. It has been approved by congressional leaders, regardless of their political convictions. One statement of support came from no less a source than Governor Ritchie of Maryland, himself a candidate for the Democratic nomination for President in 1932. In a speech at Camden, New Jersey, the other day, the Maryland chief executive said:

"I can think of no more desirable step in relieving the current period of industrial depression than that of making the frozen assets of our bank liquid through the proposed half-billion-dollar corporation.

"I believe that we should follow and cooperate with President Hoover in working out this plan. It should be a great boon to the entire country and especially to the rural districts."

The report that there was to be cancellation of war debts, so placing the cost of the war on the shoulders of American taxpayers, caused a great deal of uneasiness until it was dispelled by the statement from the White House. And it is significant that Democratic leaders as well as Republicans, progressive as well as conservative, announced that they would not go along with any such program.

There is abundant reason for their stand. In the first place the war debts are no burden on the principal nations which are paying us. Great Britain collects from Germany all that she pays us. Italy collects a little more than their payments to the United States on war debts. The United States has nothing whatever to do with war reparations, as we did not claim any for ourselves. If, therefore, the German reparations are too big a burden on that country, this is a matter for Germany and the allies to settle. After Europe has put its own house in order will be early enough for her to come to the United States.

It may be stated if German reparations are reduced, France and Great Britain cannot afford to pay the United States. But those who argue this have no good case. France is now the most heavily armed nation in the world and has increased its war machinery greatly during the period that has followed the Armistice. Great Britain has the greatest navy in the world and even in her present hour of difficulty has made no attempt to save money for the taxpayers by cutting down naval armament. War debt payments made to the United States are small when compared with sums the countries who owe us are paying for war preparations. A little disarmament in Europe might put an entirely new picture in the foreground.

Pretty Flower Becomes Pest

Once a cherished flower, now a pest that is destroying thousands of acres of valuable pasture land, the little lantana plant is the object of attack in Hawaii. Lantana, known in the United States as a pretty flower, was brought to Hawaii many years ago by some nature lover. Just who is not definitely known, and remediatory began to spread. It grows thickly at altitudes from sea level to 1,500 or 2,000 feet, and several large Hawaiian ranches are heavy losers in grazing land.

IMPROVEMENTS AT BELVEDERE

Away back in pioneer days the "old Stockman farm" was a beauty spot, with its veranda, sward and charming groves. We know whereof we speak, for thirty years ago the past summer we lived on the lower terrace in the old Stockman log house, surrounded by the rose bushes, as that seven now partly surround the Bardeen cottage.

But let us come back to the present. On the upper terrace the driveways, that have so long existed on the plat, are being graded, gravelled, and beautified by curving border lawns. The beautiful groves have been cleaned out and trimmed, the undergrowth leveled until a most charming series of wooded parks is the result.

The area fronting the mouth hall has been plowed up, and, when finished will provide a most beautiful "campus" surrounded on four sides by its cottages nestled in the grasses.

The Sentinel scribe occupied the fireman's seat in the cab of "No. 105" Sunday morning in a run up the line to "the front" by invitation of Major Sullivan. It seemed like a dream to be shooting by objects as familiar—subject by which those many winters we have been dragged through mud and snow drifts. Even fifteen miles an hour beats the "covered stage" and at that speed we passed Col. Booth's "Ka-go-the-wong" and the Carpenter farm, now ane thun catching our breath as we passed over a bad spot in the unballasted road. Tonight the steel will be laid to within three miles of Petoskey and in sight of its domes and minarets. The steel gang will then be hauled off for the present and sent to the south end.

The work of ballasting will then be begun in earnest, seventy Hungarians being expected daily for that work. About a hundred men will be employed in the work.

WOOD WISDOM

If you buy home materials at home and there is anything wrong, you can get hold of the man who owns and got things adjust. And you can only if you are dealing with a stranger at a distance. Worth thinking about. Ask the fellow who has had trouble.

If you know you are right and admit you are wrong—you are married.

Yes, you have heard about the fellow who lit a match to see if his tank was empty and found it wasn't; also the fellow who raced to the crossing to beat the train, but didn't. Did you hear of your neighbor who bought a new roof from a smooth stranger from the big city, thinking it was better than Mabelhide, and went around to his guest that it wasn't? It's often only a little investigation at home to make sure before investing, and it costs no more.

A customer demands the best from his local dealer and gets it; but in charging for six months or so and it distance, Worth thinking about. Ask the fellow who has had trouble.

Through Mabelhide roofing is beautiful in its range of colors, the practical way to say about it is its dependability. Every bit of it carries a double guarantee. Better let us explain to you what that means. It won't cost you a cent to hear about it.

Two Scotchmen had a bet to be paid by the one who caught the first fish, and one went to fishing without bait, while the other would cut gull in his line when he had a bite.

BABY FRETFUL, RESTLESS?

Look to this cause

When your baby fusses, issues and seems unable to sleep restfully, look for one common cause, doctors say. Constipation. To get rid quickly of the accumulated wastes which cause restlessness and discomfort, give a cleansing dose of Castoria. Castoria, you know, is made especially for children's delicate needs. It is a pure vegetable preparation—contains no harsh drugs, no narcotics. It is so mild and gentle you can give it to a new-born babe to relieve colic. Yet it is an effective 'bowel-regulator.' Clean-sing regulates baby will bring re-lasted comfort and restful sleep to your baby. Keep a bottle on hand. Genuine Castoria always has the name:

3 RULES big help to BOWELS

What a joy to have the bowels move like clockwork every day! It's easy, if you mind these simple rules of a famous old doctor:

1. Drink a big tumblerful of water before breakfast, and several times a day.
2. Get plenty of outdoor exercise without unduly fatiguing yourself.
3. Try for a bowel movement at exactly the same hour every day.

Everyone's bowels need help at times, but the thing to use is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. You'll get a thorough cleaning, and it won't leave your insides weak and watery. The family doctor's prescription is just fresh laxative herbs, pure pepsin, and other helpful ingredients that couldn't taint a child. But how it wakes up those lazy bowels! How good you feel with your system rid of all that poisonous waste matter.

Man-Made Morality

"A question seems as to him one day:

"'Do you think it is right for a girl to go to a movie with men if she is engaged to be married?'

"His answer to the question was:

"'Yes, if a man and girl are mating. You wouldn't, if it were some other couple just out for fun. But it is more one girl and one man.'"

Romance here holds away, romance in the spirit of France, its dashing swordsmen, filled adventures, thrilling plots and exciting episodes. Intrigue of Norse and French ancestry, fire and blood as a Viking, thrills of amusement and with the sword thrust of D'Artagnan, a kiss of breath, taking interest. He tells his own story in his own way.

Lotus Dorine is the daughter of Gaspar, a Huguenot in love, and a soldier and swordsman of note. Gaspar is a physician, but the leader is at hand, and from a stronghold high among the hills of Navarre, the courage Warrior, Henry of Navarre.

The relationship between many scenes at will stem the destiny of both the Catholics and Huguenots, the latter under the leadership of Gaspar, in Navarre in the mountain fastness, and the former encompassed on every hand by the soldiers of the king, and Gaspar's daughter in the midst.

CHAPTER I

Moon-Madness

I am one night upon an iron bench and watched the clouds drift by, the moon imposing building in that kingdom, with its cross-crowned spires, within the narrow sweep of its Manzanares. Madrid, the scene of history, would believe me. I saw the Hapsburgs and those hardy followers of his who had raised the first house of the Crescent city. I saw the Spaniards—moving to the west and south—the Frenchmen come and go, and the Spaniard come again, and I heard the thunderous shouts from a thousand throats as Toulouse galloped from the ruins of the Bastille and Napoleon, the new republic.

"Ah, well," I said, half to myself, half to the vagabond shadow of my self, "the varying fortunes of London belong to the past, she is safe now within the fold of Rome will not be ruled by Kings and spouse, courses and courtesans."

Whereupon a small brake into my reflections, the fly of a woman's fan, as near as the mist of a morning bird.

"Has your master," said the voice in Spanish, "of we walk two more squares along this way we shall have passed the lower and can ourselves into the river."

"Some of it—I," I gasped, leaping to my feet. There was something in that musical voice that touched a chord—or no, was it the long, long tuned flannel through my veins. As I stood, trembling in this new emotion, there flames left the shadow of the cloister, and, servant somewhat, caped Christian cross, tapped in the left and approached the great where I stood three flowers who might have escaped from a Titian picture—one with a slim graceful evasive with a southland that flushed in the moonlight with every movement of his soft knee. The other two were a king and a queen of old Spain bearing each of them all the trappings of royalty.

Sometimes, I student, wandering vagrants if, by some grotesque twist of fate this consciousness of mine could have been thrown back three centuries, yet, yonder stood the Catholic who was New Orleans, and the time. I felt certain—was the year of our Lord eighteen hundred twenty-one, the last but the last night. "Your majesty," and did they not look the sovereigns of ancient Spain? Unbowing, I drank them all for beauty of the modern Isabella.

She had all the regal dignity and poise of Isabel's great queen. Black silkenoff sprigs have arranged the wavy blue-black hair. Her eyes in the moonlight seemed to hold purple shadows, her face was pale for lips half parted; a fragile hand fluttering and gently closed, pressed against the curve of cheek and chin.

Her secretary, a stately man of heavy shoulders, with full beard and head powdered, spoke deep in his voice of some fine, exact old Spain, in just fresh laxative herbs, pure pepsin, and other helpful ingredients that couldn't taint a child. But how it wakes up those lazy bowels! How good you feel with your system rid of all that poisonous waste matter.

"Your majesty," he said, "I am convinced—she had noticed it. I had a watchful eye. Your majesty is too kind. I was but a lonely lapin, who, desiring only to devote to the overnight heard a voice coming out of the night and a widow.

The one who borrowed that lantern from the border one night last week will please not forget to return it.

There has never been a larger fleet of vessels in Charlevoix harbor at one time than was here on Saturday last, numbering twenty-five in all.

The new house of Levi Blanchard on Mont Street, now embraces a very handsome bay window making it one of the handsomest residences in the village.

Fifteen vessels were towed into Charlevoix from across o'clock Friday morning until twelve o'clock Friday night, and anchored in Round Lake for want of dock room.

The last report we had from the editor of this paper was, that he, in company with Senator Butters, were entertained in Washington, D. C. He expects to return this week.

Wallace A. Smith, Esq., editor of the Charlevoix, Mich., Sentinel, is in the city the guest of Mr. Ben and Mr. Will Newland. He is steered right among Charlevoix Inquirers.

HISTORIC

The Charlevoix Historic Society met last Tuesday evening at the residence of Mrs. U. D. Wood, and elected the following officers for the ensuing years:

President, E. H. Green; first vice president, John Nuttalls; second vice president, Mrs. Pope; secretary, A. F. Washburn; treasurer, Mrs. U. D. Wood; librarian, Robert Miller.

Executive committee, Mrs. L. H. Bartholomew, Miss Esther Butters, Miss Hattie Amelia, F. W. Mayne, U. D. Wilcox. The next meeting will be held this evening at the home of Mr. E. H. Green.

SIXTY YEARS AGGO

We are speechless with amazement. And why? One year ago the perpetual theme of our people was "Harbor Improvement." Through the energetic efforts of our Senator and Representative at the last session of the legislature, a few donations of land were allotted us for harbor improvement. Then the people disgusted their benefactors by a senseless clamor about the Commissionership, inadequacy of appropriation, etc. Result: a retraction of the gift and a withdrawal of the same on a more appreciative community. Then what followed? Nothing. Instead of the people uniting, "The power lies in us, with do the work," they seemed to sink at once into a state of stoical indifference, manifesting no concern either by their actions or conversation, and thus it is yet. The winter approaches, in which it is necessary to make a great strike at the river improvement, but it is not even a topic of conversation. This is why we are enabled, this perhaps it is better to our interests to prosecute this project. It may be to the interest of certain ones, but what does the mass of our population consider most indicative to their weal, an immediate opening of Pine River, or one foot of water at its mouth for years to come? By a continuance of the people's apparent stability on the subject, the latter part of the interrogative may be a reality. Choose between the two. We might picture for you the blessings which the former would bring to your doors, portray the comparative poverty which must attend the latter, and hold them up with to your gaze, and Hamlet, the portrait which so stirred the soul of his mother. The soul-unconscious soon actually discourages the efforts of the more energetic minority. The need of prompt action and determined effort is great; and the result of such an effort, if made unitedly, would astonish the most sanguine. But we begin to believe the people are waiting for a spontaneous opening such as one as was realized at Portage Lake. Now, friends, let us appeal to your judgment in this matter that certainly will convince you that your most vital interest lies in the opening of the mouth of Pine River.

WHAT A BLADDER PHYSIC?

Should do. Work on the bladder as castor oil on the bowels. Drive out impurities and excess acids that cause irritation which results in getting up nights, frequent desire, burning, leg pains or backache. BU-KETS (8 gr. tablets) is a pleasant bladder physic. Get a 25c last box from your druggist. After four days if not relieved go back and get your money. You will feel good after this cleansing and you get your regular sleep.

picked up by a flower man on almost the thirty yard line and went over for no touchdown. They then made the extra point by completing a wide end sweep. This ended the scoring for the rest of the game for both sides.

"America's History"

It seems that the American History people are at least original. Did imagination, or can you imagine the C. H. S. mourning the deaths of Stewart Irish Coleman and D. P. Noel? But, that's what we have been are doing. The American History classes were supposed to get some material on American Colonists. One group took a quakers meeting. And Miss Jane Slatter gave a report in the meeting in the form that the ladies sewing class was making band quilts to put on the backs of the colonial calumans and North. They were to be different kinds as the manner in which the two met their deaths were different. Mr. Coleman having killed Mr. North which was against the hanging of S. E. Coleman.

Other reports were given. Jean Slatter reported on the private life of William Penn. Mary Helen Fechtman on the every day life of the Colonists from 1620 to 1772; Dorothy Partridge on general life in the colonies and Virginia Nickerson chose to reproduce letters from colonists to England.

Junior Play

The cast has been chosen for Channing Pollocks, "The Enemy," and the first rehearsal was held on Monday evening. The Junior Class feels sure that the public will welcome this presentation which has proved to be such a success in high schools, colleges and universities, and in little theatres and stock companies. It has been said concerning "The Enemy" that found it be seen by the majority of people in all the countries of the world that there would be no more war.

The young people realize that they have set for themselves a hard task, but can and will do all in their power to make the evening of December 11th, (eleventh) a memorable one for Charlevoix.

It has already been decided to reduce the admission charge to 35 and 25 cents in order to give an opportunity to more people to witness this play which Miss Bonnelle, founder and director of the Detroit Civic Players believes to be one of the masterpieces of this age.

Address to Assembly

Dr. Dean addressed the Junior and Senior High School students Monday morning on economics and communal table discussion. He not only gave his audience valuable information concerning the subject, but also told many interesting details of the advance in musical science under such men as Haydn, Mozart and others.

WM. L. ZIRBES DIES SUNDAY

FOLLOWING AN EXTENDED ILLNESS OF SEVERAL WEEKS

End Comes At Family Home, 209 State Street; Service Held At St. Mary Church

William L. Zirbes, following an extended illness for some weeks past in a most critical condition, died at the family home, 209 State Street, early Sunday evening, age forty-eight years.

Mr. Zirbes has resided in Charlevoix about four years where he has conducted his business under the name of the Charlevoix Auto Sales Company, which from the start appeared to be a prosperous business and no doubt would have continued with a high degree of success, had ever business depression which has been universal, retarded somewhat, but as well as all other business firms.

He made acquaintances easily, was respected by the public generally and through straightforward dealing and Thursday, gets all hot and bothered in the presence of his pretty sweetheart, Mary, in that picture she is running true to form. Bob is brave enough to keep a tar-foot chasm in horse-back without turning a hair, or to face a whole score of desperate bandits single-handed, but he cannot summon sufficient courage to ask the girl he loves to marry him. The upshot is that she has to do the heavy work of the courtship herself, by flirting with another man to make Bob jealous. Which is absolutely true to life, as any woman with a knowledge of men of Bob's type will tell you.

Buck Jones, the most popular human on the screen, plays Bob, and it may interest you to know that Buck, off the screen, is not unlike the character he portrays. Loretta Dayers, a newcomer who is slated for big things by Columbia, is the girl in the case, and the supporting cast includes Paul Fix, Nena Quartaro, Robert Ellis, Harlan E. Knight, Tom Bay and Clarence Muse. Lewis King is responsible for the direction.

He Man Favorite With Fair Sex

Real he-men movie heroes, who glory in giving daring exhibitions of fine horsemanship and what not, invariably win the approbation of lady picture fans, whether they be timid little school teachers from Keokuk, Iowa, or New York society belles. Naturally, part of the fascination of these dare-devils is due to their nonchalant disregard of danger, but there is another element that enhances their attraction: their difference in the presence of members of the fair sex. It's a curious thing, but invariably true—the bolder the man, the abyer he is with the ladies, and while not all ladies like this, a good percentage of them do.

This what Bob, the good-looking sheik of "The Fighting Sheriff" Columbia's new Western which comes to the Palace Theatre Wednesday and Thursday, gets all hot and bothered in the presence of his pretty sweetheart, Mary, in that picture she is running true to form. Bob is brave enough to keep a tar-foot chasm in horse-back without turning a hair, or to face a whole score of desperate bandits single-handed, but he cannot summon sufficient courage to ask the girl he loves to marry him. The upshot is that she has to do the heavy work of the courtship herself, by flirting with another man to make Bob jealous. Which is absolutely true to life, as any woman with a knowledge of men of Bob's type will tell you.

Buck Jones, the most popular human on the screen, plays Bob, and it may interest you to know that Buck, off the screen, is not unlike the character he portrays. Knight, Tom Bay and Clarence Muse. Lewis King is responsible for the direction.

PRIZES AWARDED AT HALLOWEEN PARTY

The prizes at the All-Church Hallowe'en Party last week at the Methodist Church were awarded by three judges to a gentleman from Detroit, Miss Bittner of the public schools, and Mr. George Mugnion.

Little Miss Mary Frances Zeitler, from the Catholic Church, won the second prize of $2 as "Little Bo Peep," in a clever costume while the first prize money of $3 went to Peggy Baker, from the Baptist Sunday School, who represented a native Norwegian girl, in fine, genuine, native Norwegian clothes and ornaments.

Nat Barney of Detroit spent the week end here visiting relatives. He motored from Detroit Friday accompanied by Mrs. H. R. Fowler and made the return trip Monday. His mother-in-law, Mrs. Jana Shrier, accompanied him on the return trip.

By P. C. Mayne of Cheboygan visited Charlevoix relatives and friends Sunday. He is another Mr. P. W. Mayne, who has been at Cheboygan for several weeks came with him and will remain until after the season, when she goes to California for the winter.

WILLIAM BURNS DIES IN PETOSKEY

Friends Shocked To Hear Of End; Long a Resident in Marion Township

Charlevoix residents were shocked this morning when a report was received here that Mr. William Burns of Marion township had passed away at the Petoskey hospital late last night.

Mr. Burns was a pioneer of this region and for the past sixty-five years has resided on the farm in Marion township, owned by him for many years and prior to that by his parents.

He was a native of Canada, born at Aro and with his parents came to Michigan when the family took over the 160 acre property where he continued during his lifetime.

For some months past he has been a victim of chronic nephritis that failed to yield to medical treatment. Sunday this condition became more severe. Tuesday he entered Petoskey hospital for treatment and as above noted, passed away Wednesday night.

Mr. Burns was highly respected by everyone and recognized as an honest, thrifty, upright citizen, open, straightforward in his business affairs, honest with the public and himself and leaves a multitude of neighbors and friends to regret his passing.

He is survived by Mrs. Burns with whom he was united forty years ago, also by two sisters, Mrs. Alice Scroggie of Cranbrook, Mrs. Addy Kenetts of Grand Rapids and three brothers, George and Ed of Charlevoix and Nassay Burns of Plainwell. There are no children.

Funeral arrangements have not been made at this early hour.

FIRE DESTROYS BARN LAST FRIDAY NIGHT

Fire completely destroyed a large grain barn on the farm until recently owned by Henry Colbents, near Sequanota, last Friday night, together with a few tons of hay. Mr. J. M. McGeagh, through a recent transfer, is the present owner of the farm property.

No satisfactory solution has been discovered as to the cause of the fire.

BARBERS REDUCE PRICES ON TONSORIAL WORK

Just at this time hair cuts and shaves cost less in local shops than for many moons past, when a half cut cost 50 cents and a shave 25 cents.

Prices at present in local shops are not fully stabilized ranging from 25 cents for a hair cut to 40 cents and shaves from 15 to 20 cents.

Of Interest To The Public

STATE OFFICIAL VISITS HOSPITAL

A representative from one of the state departments was in Charlevoix Tuesday and Wednesday making an examination of conditions and general affairs at the local hospital.

Some changes were made and suggestions, amounting to a pre-emptory order given to the management, which, probably, will be placed into immediate effect.

Otherwise another visit will be made by the official who will at that time see that his suggestion for a general housecleaning at this local institution is promptly and effectively carried out.

Reprint from the October 29th issue of the Courier:

COWARDLY JOURNALISM

If for nothing more than out of courtesy to the group of men who are serving to the best of their ability and without compensation as directors of the Charlevoix Hospital, a public institution, we feel obligated to take exception to an article published last week in The Charlevoix Sentinel.

To the uninformed, Editor Ira Adams' account of the visit here of a state official could be construed to mean an investigation of most anything from embezzlement of funds to the perpetration of illegal operations. It was a contemptible, cowardly manner in which to bring the incident before the public. It was a discredit to clean, honest journalism; an unnecessary and damaging attack upon the integrity of the group who are managing the hospital affairs.

This matter of a state investigation at the hospital at least deserved a statement of facts. Either Editor Adams was too lazy to get far enough from his desk to obtain the necessary information, or else he just wilfully took advantage of his position as editor, for personal or other reasons, to discredit and attack the hospital directors.

The next above, the simple product of a feculent brain, warped with deceit, carries no element of virtue; no convincing fact and no concise statement concerning the recent visit of a representative from the state department of health to the Charlevoix Hospital; gives no reason for such visit nor his activities when here.

Neither does it make denial as to the short article in the Sentinel, issue of October 22nd. The article last mentioned was wholly true, plainly stated, and was written without forethought malice, but rather from the viewpoint that it would eventually prove beneficial to the local hospital.

No small amount of talk was indulged in by local citizens immediately following the publication of October 22, who were not fully conversant with hospital affairs. Much more by persons who presumably were well informed on the subject. At least they should have been as they are members of the official supervisory board of the institution.

From the latter there has been utterances untrue, vile, vicious, threatening and profane relative to the article in question, and this too, in a public business place, during which talk two prominent business men—other than Mr. Adams—came in for a stupendous tongue lashing, and these two business men have been pillars of and financial supporters, not only of the hospital but in many other charitable enterprises. Possibly abuses of this character will prove a good investment for the hospital.

LEGION TO HOLD STAG SUPPER NEXT TUESDAY EVENING

Members of Leslie T. Shapton Post No. 226, American Legion, are very much gratified over the success of the Birch Magician entertainment sponsored by the post this week. The nifty little profit realized will be devoted to the relief work now being carried on by the Legion here.

At their regular meeting, Tuesday evening, members of the post decided to hold a stag supper at the Legion Home next Tuesday evening, November 10th, at which rabbit will be the chief dish and to which members of Boyne City and East Jordan posts are to be invited. Among other matters of business transacted, perhaps the most important is the appointment of a house committee for the year to look after repairs and care of the Legion Home. Fred Gill will be chairman of this committee, with Frank Coalia and Herbert Wakefield as co-members.

Legionnaires are urged not to forget that the 1932 departmental record cards and dues are to be turned over to the State Commander on Armistice day, November 11th. If the post is to receive the special national citation, it will be necessary for the membership to equal or exceed that for 1931, on that date. Only $1.75 need be paid now by new or renewing members, with the balance of $1.25 due June 1, 1932.

On Armistice Day, the flag in the city memorial park will be flown at half mast until eleven o'clock a. m., when members of the Legion's bugle squad will play taps, after which it will be raised to the masthead and day fireworks will be set off.

The post bugle and drum corps will take part in the parade at Petoskey in the afternoon.

NEW TYPE SERVICES AT BAPTIST CHURCH

Special Meetings Conducted by Rev. James F. Harrison of Chicago Interesting

Much interest and enthusiasm is shown in the new and unique type of special meetings now being conducted in the First Baptist Church by the Rev. James F. Harrison of The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.

Mr. Harrison has brought with him a variety of gifts—teacher, preacher, artist and musician. Those he freely employs in the nightly services. His appeal is not only to adults, but to young people and boys and girls as well. He has arranged a program that interests and benefits each of these three groups.

Nightly Bible contests stimulate interest in the Scriptures and are enjoyed by all.

An interesting feature of the service each evening are the unusual Scripture songs written by Mr. Harrison, both words and music, and published in a book entitled "Truth Tunes." Various musical forms are to be used during the meeting, such as canon forms, etc. Tomorrow night the congregation will sing antiphonally.

Mr. Harrison's illustrated message is the climax of every evening service. While speaking, he draws with black crayon upon large sheets of newsprint. This not only enhances the message but enables the listener or to more readily grasp and retain the Scripture Truth presented.

Timely and vital subjects, such as "Creation," "Adam and Eve," etc., are being offered. Among other things Mr. Harrison said, "Both God and Adam bore witness to the fact that among all the animals brought by God unto Adam to be named, there was not one found to be his counterpart or to be evolved into his like. On the mouth of two witnesses it shall be established." This was a prophetic rebuke concerning modern theories, namely, "evolution."

No one should fail to avail himself of the unusual opportunity to hear the Word of God presented in this interesting and unique manner.

The meetings are to be conducted every night of this and next week, except Saturdays, at 7:30 o'clock and are to conclude Sunday evening, November 15.

Come! Bring your friends!

Edward Bronersky, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Bronersky, is in the local hospital suffering burns from an explosion of gun powder.

LOCAL LAD LEADS FLORIDA FOOTBALL TEAM TO VICTORY

Led by the hard hitting Mason Rose, Sarasota's Saints battered over a 12-0 victory over a fighting Rose Bud eleven from Winter Haven here Friday afternoon for their first win in three starts.

Smashing his way through a strong Rose Bud forward wall, Rose, 195 pound fullback, made 241 yards from scrimmage for the Saints. As in games before, it took from two to six opponents to stop him.

Rose paved the way for the Saints from touchdown by slashing off tackle for 55 yard to set the ball on the Rose Bud's 14-yard line. After two plays he carried the ball to the three yard marker from where Willis Hayes scored.

Rose displayed some fine running on the next touchdown when he smashed through the line in a perfect hole and by clever dodging of he did some fancy sidestepping and sidestarring on his 36 yard jaunt to the goal line.

JAMES LINN DIES IN CHICAGO TUESDAY

Resident of Charlevoix For Many Years; Death Comes While On The Street

James Linn, a resident of Charlevoix for many years, died unexpectedly in Chicago Tuesday, according to a message received here the same evening.

Mr. Linn went to Chicago a short time ago to visit his daughter and at the time of his death was walking on the street. The cause of his death was heart trouble with which he has been afflicted for several months.

The body will be brought to Charlevoix some time this week where the funeral service is being arranged, will probably be held Friday.

FUNERAL SERVICE FOR MRS. CORA B. GRAY

Funeral service was held Thursday for Mrs. Cora B. Gray, who died two days before at her home after her sister, Mrs. James Gaskin.

She was born at Allendale, Mich., the exact date of her birth we have forgotten, but some seven years ago she and for some seven years owned and operated the Shawsey Novelty Store, located on the basement of the Grove Inn at Northport for fourteen years she was a prosperous real estate operator in Florida.

Mrs. Gray is survived by one son, Carroll Gray of Melbourne, Florida, one sister, Mrs. James Gaskin of Charlevoix and a brother, E. L. Stanford of Marquette.

Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Mitchell, son Billy and daughter, Joan, started by motor for Miami Beach, Florida, last Thursday, where according to their usual annual custom, they will spend the winter season.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Horn and Mr. and Mrs. George Holmes of Detroit, friends relatives of Mr. and Mrs. Jay Adams, are spending a two weeks vacation at the Adams farm in Marion township. Several other Detroit friends will join the party next week, the men to enjoy an outing in the woods with dogs and guns—the ladies to be entertained as best they can with no more folks to disturb their method of enjoyment.

POTATO SHOW GREAT EVENT

The Ninth Annual Top O'Michigan Potato, Apple and Seed Show was decidedly the greatest exhibition ever held in Northern Michigan. The show was biggest and better in every particular. A large audience was present at the programs. Never have we seen so large a display of apples. The apple department was approximately one-third larger than it was last year and the competition much more keen. It was a wonderful night to see the deep red color that was evident on all exhibits.

In the potato department the same statement holds true. The competition was such that many wonderfully arranged exhibits were not awarded premium money. In one class alone there were over 125 peck samples. In this department Frank A. W. Behling of Boyne City was the heaviest winner receiving a total of $31.00. He had first place on a peck sample of Burbanks, third place on a sample of Irish Cobblers, second place on a bushel of Burbanks (taking potatoes), and second on a bushel of White Rurals in addition to having other smaller awards.

William Shephard, East Jordan who exhibited for the first time this year was our next highest winner. He received ninth with a peck of Russet Potatoes competing against the entire Show, was second in the Beginners Class, and had the best peck within the county. Carl Hamp came same Harry Behling of Boyne City who had the best bushel of baking potatoes in the Show, and third on peck, with a peck of Russet Potatoes, and received ninth with a bushel of Certified Seed, making a total of $15.00. Next came Geo. Sneathen of Charlevoix for second place with a peck of Irish Cobblers.

Charlevoix County Exhibit placed third in competition with six counties. This exhibit consists of ten different samples and is one of the features of the Show.

In the Junior Department Gwendolyn Hott, East Jordan, was our best showman, having fourth best sample in the entire department in addition to winning first within his club. Robert Tatsler, Boyne City, placed highest in the Club Potato Judging Contest in competition with a large number of club members.

In the apple division we were likewise represented by Erskine Orchard, Douglas Tibbits and Wilbur Bettle.

OF INTEREST TO THE HOUSEWIFE

Rid gloves will clean nicely by dampening a rinse in milk, rubbing the cloth over a cake of toilet soap, then over the gloves.

Use eggshells to wash bottles of irregular orifices. Crush them fine, put into the vessel with warm, soapy water and shake well.

In removing basting threads, cut them every few inches. Do not pull a long thread out at one time, as this may leave holes in the goods.

When laundering curtains for first time, soak them in four tablespoonfuls of salt to each four quarts of water. The curtains will wash easily as the ironing will wash out readily.

To reheat leftover mashed potatoes, place them in a double boiler, add a little warm milk or cream, heat well, cover tightly and cook fifteen minutes.

STAGE COACH TALES

By E. C. TAYLOR

The Race With Mail

WILLIAM G. HUNT, an old stage coach driver of the National road days, lived until recently at Fairfield, Iowa. Nearing eighty years of age, he said he felt like "jumping up and cracking his heels together whenever he heard or read of the fuss and events on the old National road," and wished he were back there again.

He was the son of James Hunt, of the noted bridge building firm of the early decades of the United States, and started driving a stage coach before the age of ten years. He was born in Uniontown, Pa., in 1839 and went to Iowa to live in 1847, a year after he left the road.

In 1846 he was driving for the "151 Line," the National Road Stage company. Both the "Old Line" and the "Used Intent" line carried the United States mail at that time.

The mail was of two classes, the "fleet mail," in leather pouches that was to be speeded west as fast as possible, and the "express mail," in canvas bags, which was carried on a slower schedule. The latter was frequently called the "second mail," as it contained what is now second class mail matter.

In December, 1846, the "Old Line" carried the "fleet mail" and the "Used Intent" line the "canvas mail." Both was driving the mail coach for the "Old Line" out of Cumberland, Md., and Jacob Crouch drove the mail stage for the rival company.

Great rivalry existed between the two companies and their drivers over carrying the mail, and races were frequent. On this particular day, Crouch loaded the "canvas mail" aboard his coach immediately after the train arrived at Cumberland, and started off at full speed toward the west.

The "fleet mail" was handed to Hunt, who had to take it to the post office, where it was overhauled before he could start on his trip, causing him considerable delay. While waiting in front of the Cumberland post office for the mail to be sorted, Jack Strunk and other "Used Intent" line drivers chided Hunt with the fact that the "canvas mail" had such a good start that Hunt could not get near it.

"I made up my mind," said Hunt later, "that if it was in the hides of my two mules I would catch and pass him."

It was after nightfall when Hunt got under way, and in crossing a narrow in the Cumberland mountains, his stage coach lamps went out. For what Hunt thought was a calamity turned out to be an advantage.

As soon as he had crossed the Wills Creek bridge, he put his mules to a fast trot and never pulled up until he reached Hock Hill, seven miles out of Cumberland.

By this time the road was wind ing, and he could see the lights of his rival's coach. Quickly stepping off in front of Rock's coach lamps, he could not see Rock approaching, although the big headlamps of the mail bag had kept a careful lookout.

Rock was very much surprised when Hunt pulled up along side of him, and for the record made his way into Frostburg, Md., lashing their teams at every jump.

Hunt's team finished first and Rock's second teams finished in the reach by the time Hunt had forty seconds. A friendly driver ran with the "fleet mail" to the Frostburg post office, while another of the lamps Rock did not see.

The rules on the fresh teams were thrown up to him and he was off again in 30 flat. The way mail bag was thrown onto the coach as he backed past the post office.

Crouch, carrying the "canvas mail," had lost the race, and was forced on almost at Hunt Station, a station of Big Savage. Rock passed Crouch. Crouch gave up the fight and, trusting his team every inch of the road to Frostburg, came out of the mail route.

Rock had covered the 22 miles in 2 hours and 10 minutes. Fourteen miles of this he had lost, as time, but he pulled into Piney Grove 22 minutes ahead of his rival.

Crabs Great Travelers

A British Isles book records that during recent experiments, crabs were removed from their original home to a place where there was far more food for them, and where it was thought they would settle down quite happily. But they did not. Some day or had they been turned into the sea than they all started for home. And in a surprisingly short time the majority of these specimens signed for the 78 miles back again. Even lobsters carried his own identification tag of brass to the sea bed by means of a label attached to his biggest claw.

Coral Fisheries

The precious coral is found withinmedal on the coasts of Algeria and the islands of the Mediterranean sea. The most important coral fisheries are along the coasts of Tunisia, Algeria and Morocco, but coral runs also in clusters in the vicinity of Naples and on the coasts of Sardinia, Corsica, Calabria and Provence. It occurs in the North Atlantic off the Azores and coast of Africa. Black coral grows to a considerable height and specimens are found in the tropical water off Australia.

Method of Artists

"Scumming," to art, is the process of softening the colors of a picture by blending them with a neutral tint, applying this neutral tint over the colors by only a nearly dry brush.

Hunger Pangs End Tour of Hitch-Hike Girls

Start Out to See World, but Stomachs Rebel.

ATLANTA, Ga.—Pangs of hunger brought to an abrupt end here a proposed hitch-hike tour of the world by two pretty Michigan girls, and now they are back at their homes at Grand Rapids, where they can get three square meals a day, if not romance and excitement.

They got as far as Atlanta in nine stops, although the pangs of hunger first struck them at Chattanooga, 4 days after they left their parents. In the latter city they had only enough money for a few meals, and when they had spent that they started walking.

Having no money and no means of satisfying their hunger, they wandered along the streets of Atlanta, looking longingly into the windows of the various restaurants and grocery stores.

At a grocery department display at a large uptown department store Leone and Thelma became so engrossed that they went inside and passed slowly up and down the aisles, looking with longing glances at the food on the counters.

Their action aroused the suspicions of store detectives, and before they knew it they were whisked in the office of the manager.

There they told their story. They had left their homes intending to go to Florida and ship from there to South America, later going to Spain and the continent.

"What were you going for money?" the manager asked.

"We thought we could earn our way," said Leone. "We were wrong."

The manager agreed at their request to wire their parents. In the meantime they were taken to the police station, where they stayed only a few hours before wires came.

The girls ate for the first time in two days just before they boarded a train for Grand Rapids.

"Travel may broaden the mind," Leone observed, "but it certainly darkens the stomach."

Woman Elopes Day After Wedding

Flees Undesired Mate With Childhood Suitor.

Miami, Fla.—Mrs. Mary Condon Greenleaf, beautiful twenty-second bride of two weeks, has come back to say Pennsylvania bridegroom after a week's visit in Miami.

This is not a social notice, as it may seem, but the story of a romance that parents' wishes and marriage could not break.

In the same automobile that took the young bride back to her husband was Harry White, twenty-six, charged with abducting her from the bridegroom's home at Williamsport, Pa., the day after her marriage.

The divorce of the Pennsylvania bridegroom, in the story, was the elder of Father Shelbrook Knotts of Williamsport, who came here to return the couple after they were arrested by Miami police.

The bride, before leaving the police station here, asserted that her romance with White was only "temporarily interrupted" by the law.

They decided to thwart separation at the altar and "elope right" to get married in Florida.

The next day Greenleaf, infuriated when he learned that the bride he had married so long had left him for her childhood sweetheart, got a warrant charging White with stealing Greenleaf became after thoughtful. Her childhood sweetheart had forgotten her.

"I married the man of father's choice," she said. "He had money, but he was much older than I. I did it only to please father, and because I thought Harry would never come back."

Mary went tearfully to her husband's home the night of the wedding.

There who should appear the next day but Harry White, whom she had never ceased loving. He had read he finally in a Pittsburgh paper of her approaching marriage and had arrived too late to stop it.

"I turned to the bold wall," he explained later.

She told him of the long fight against the matchmaking of her father, her disappointment when she got not hear from him after he left Williamsport

NEW WAYS OF BEATING THE DEPRESSION

Nothing is more dangerous in business than to assume that there is nothing new on the horizon, suggests Dr. Julius Klein, Assistant Secretary of Commerce, in his latest comment on the depression.

"Do you think things stand still in a depression?" he asks. "Do you think it's just a matter of standing by and waiting for better times? If you do you may have a long wait before better times hit you. For a depression is just the time when things happen to business with increased speed."

Every business slump, it appears, has been the signal for new inventions, new methods of doing business, even new industries. And the men who were able to see what these new inventions meant in terms of their own jobs, who sensed the significance of these new ideas, who saw the possibilities of these new industries, were the men who got ahead during the depressions and went on to leadership in the new days of prosperity that followed.

Today history is repeating itself, Dr. Klein declares. "And if you want more money or a better job or increased business," he adds, "then strap on your watch and keep an eye out what old Father Time is doing. Make him work for you, because if you don't, he's pretty likely to work against you.

"Look what he's doing now. He's changing the sales map of the world with the aid of constantly improving transportation and communication facilities. He's changing the whole system of marketing, with new kinds of merchandising, chain stores, cooperatives, new installment systems. He's opening up all sorts of efficiency cuginees, research workers and chemists."

WOMEN TO PREACH THRIFT

Women's organizations throughout the country are planning this winter to devote at least part of their energies to preaching the homely virtues of thrift, an old-fashioned virtue which has come back into public favor during the past two years.

As slogans for the thrift campaign, the women will use two quotations, one from George Washington and the other from Benjamin Franklin. Washington's contribution is this: "Economy makes happy homes and sound nations." Franklin's is: "If you know how to spend less than you get, you have the philosopher's stone."

As a basis for the campaign, an article by Walter Lippman suggests:

"There have been some economists in recent years who have preached the doctrine of high spending as the means to prosperity. They are, I think, dead wrong in their economic analysis. I know they are wrong as guides to practical human conduct. In the art of spending, wisdom lies in remaining comfortably within the minimum of one's earnings or income.

"The hoary rules of prudence have in our day acquired an air of niggardliness and timidity. Better, we say to ourselves, live dangerously without too much calculation, making the most of what the day can bring, and to let the future come: it will find us gay and generous and unafraid. That is a good philosophy. But those who most need to understand the meaning of prudence do not live gayly and generously and unafraid.

"Prudence in spending is a fundamental practical virtue in a civilization like ours where no one's position is permanent and there is great fluctuation in almost everyone's personal fortunes. Amidst uncertainty prudence is the virtue by which each man does what he can to free himself from the effects of uncertainty and thus to remain in some measure the master of his fate."

MANUFACTURING CRIMINALS

The United States has made an unenviable record in promoting the "manufacture" of criminals, on a mass-production basis.

It has not done this, of course, with malice aforethought. But it has been done, so far as results are concerned, through the institution which is supposed to promote security and stability—the law.

Individual liberties have been abrogated while passing through a veritable orgy of lawmaking. Red-tape and ponderous machine have been created that allow the real lawbreakers to often escape from justice, even when there is no doubt whatever of their guilt. Contempt for law has been caused to grow in the minds of millions of otherwise good citizens.

Too much is as bad as no law at all.

COOPERATION AT ALL TIMES

It is interesting to note that of all the plans that have been suggested to aid the farmer, only one has been given anything like unanimous approval by experts—the farm cooperative.

Cooperation, both in producing and marketing, must be the dominant factor in any program designed to restore prosperity to agriculture. It is sound in economic principle—a fact designed to restore prosperity to agriculture. It is sound in economic principle—a fact that has been proven by American manufacturing industries, as well as by the long-established farm cooperatives—and it produces definite results.

It cannot be too often pointed out that the individual farmer, when he goes to sell his products, is at an inescapable disadvantage. He must take what is offered or fail to sell. But when he bands together with ten or fifty or a hundred thousand other farmers, the shoe is on the other foot. He has become "big business" himself, and he can bargain and make fair terms.

It is said that one barrier in the way of successful cooperatives, in the past, has been the virtual refusal of many farmers to cooperate when times are comparatively good. Then, when bad times come along, they are without the organization and machinery for taking decisive action. If the present severe agricultural depression has taught farmers that they must cooperate all the time and under all circumstances if they are to prosper, it will have done a great deal for the American farming industry.

A FRANK INTERNATIONALIST

As a usual thing when we listen to the honeyed words of economists from across the waters we involuntarily place a hand on our left hip pocket to see whether our pocked book is still there. But we want to say a word in behalf of Theodore E. Gregory, British economist, who spoke recently at the Williamstown Institute of Politics, or "Cave of the Winds," a few days ago. Mr. Gregory is outspokenly frank, a quality rare in international economists, and for that reason alone, if he ever comes to our town, we are going to invite him out to lunch.

Prof. Gregory—we call him professor because ninety per cent of those who speak at Williamstown are supposed to be professors—predicts the collapse of the world economically in a short time, if nothing is done about it, and advises close cooperation between British and American financiers.

"British and American rivalry in the international field," says Prof. Gregory, according to the Associated Press, "would be fatal. One can be quite clear as to what cooperation will be. "It will be the duty of America to furnish the money and it will be the duty of London to furnish the experience."

It is in this last paragraph that Prof. Gregory rises to great heights and wins our unbounded admiration. For a decade and a half, ever since the close of the World War, it has been the high aim of internationalists everywhere, even in the United States, to put over a program in which Uncle Sam would pay and Europe run the show. They have backed and filled and pretended they were for international brotherhood, universal peace, pooling of international interests, and so on, but all the time they have been for something along the line of Prof. Gregory's expression, as quoted above.

Yet they have never been able to express their program succintly, but have instead written millions of words on Uncle Sam's duty to the world. Then along comes Professor Gregory and sums up their aims, their purposes and their heartfelt desires in twenty words—"It will be the duty of America to furnish the money and it will be the duty of London to furnish the experience."

A monument should be erected to Prof. Gregory at Williamstown. He has at last captured internationalist thought and condensed it into a score of words. Shakespeare could have done no better.

UP TO THE INDIVIDUAL

The automobile accident problems should be approached from the standpoint that it is the individual driver's problem.

All encouragement should be given to moves to modernize codes and to pass laws requiring the examination of vehicles and drivers. These steps can save many lives, to say nothing of thousands of dollars worth of property. But at the same time we must do our utmost to drive home to the individual the responsibility that is his when he takes the wheel of a far and embarks upon the public streets and highways.

It has been suggested that an honor code be created for drivers. If all drivers would seriously subscribe to it the ghastly toll of deaths would drop over night. Not one fatal accident in ten is strictly unavoidable. In nine cases someone, through recklessness, carelessness or incompetence, has erred. A life snuffed out is the result.

A ton or two of metal, moving at high speed, represents a tremendous destructive force if it is mishandled. None of us would take a chance on putting a stick of dynamite in a fire or looking down the muzzle of a gun and playing with the trigger. Yet hundreds of thousands of drivers do the motoring equivalents of these acts—by going at excessive speeds, on narrow or rough roads, by passing on curves, by cutting in and out in the face of oncoming traffic, by driving on the wrong side of the highway.

Public opinion must be directed, with all its force, toward making the individual conscious of his duty, if the accident toll is to be materially checked.

TWO KINDS OF REVIVALS ARE NEEDED

By George B. Lockwood

We need in this country a revival of religion and of patriotism.

We need a revival of religion because it furnishes the only code of ethics that has ever proved of any practical account. We have overproduction of about everything in this country but character. Washington truly said that religion is the nursery of character, and character is the cement which holds our civilization together.

It is one of the grave penalties of a period of luxury and ease that it destroys the tendency to serious thought. For that lack of serious thought we are paying the price today. Whenever things go wrong under a representative form of government it must be charged up to the selfishness and indifference of the people whose responsibility it is to create and renew this government. About half of our citizens do not even take the trouble to vote, and if they were not pounded into action by political organizations the percentage would be less than half of.

Every complaint against corruption, incompetency, greed and graft in government is an indictment of the citizenship which tolerates and endures and even supports the sort of officialism under which these abuses develop. If only those who have done their full duty as citizens, the sovereigns of a republic, were to complain about these evils, the noise they make would be inconsiderable.

The complaint that the oncoming generation is less serious and more indifferent than the old, has some basis, but not so much as is generally believed. The character of the young is formed by the nature and the old, not so much by precept as by example.

It was commonly taught and believed during our more prosperous years as a nation that "getting by" with the least possible effort was an evidence of cleverness. Hard work came to be regarded as at best a necessary evil, and any sort of hardship for the individual something to be resented in outcry against the social and economic system under which such a thing was possible.

But work is not a curse, but a blessing. It is essential to the development not only of the body, but the mind. It liberates, develops and inspires men. The unused hand withers. The unused brain decays. The unused heart hardens. With use all these organs are developed and strengthened.

The best school Americans ever attended was the harsh college of the wilderness, which presented obstacles to men which made it necessary for them to toil and think and struggle.

If youth of today is less serious minded, less purposeful, less courageous, less independent than the youth of a generation ago it is because it is has on the whole, been its misfortune to have things to easy. Few men either think or work unless they are driven to it by a necessity which seems malevolent, but is actually beneficent. The present period of depression will make more men than it breaks; will make them in character though it break them in fortune, and thereby give them a usefulness and thoughtfulness and happiness that is of more value than material wealth.

We are told that the oncoming generation takes no interest in religion, because it is too little related to life. Religion is something that no one does anyone else any particular favor by studying or accepting. Religion deals with the origin and destiny of men beyond the horizon, behind and in front, to which their eyes can reach, and within those horizons helps work out the problem of the individual's relation to truth and to his fellow men. If either youth or age is not of its own initiative interested in such a problem, it is because the distractions of the temporary completely absorb them. Many of them will have to meet the sorrows and difficulties of life which sober and make thoughtful before they can realize the essential need of religion.

We need a revival of religion and patriotism. And religion, under wrongheaded leadership, is seeking too much to divorce itself from patriotism. The one great emotion cannot destroy the other without destroying itself. In patriotism is wrapped up the loyalty to home and kindred, to principles and ideals; behind it in our history is the moving tradition of heroism and sacrifice that runs from generation to generation. The two go together, and he who would separate one of these vital loyalties from the other, would destroy both.

OLD CHARLEVOIX BUILDINGS

In connection with the probability that three brick blocks will be erected in Charlevoix next summer, the old settler counts the pioneer buildings that are yet in use.

Probably the oldest building on Bridge Street that stands intact and is now in use is the "Chamberlain building," on the northwest corner of Bridge and Clinton, now occupied by Fowler's meat market. It was built in 1867, and has had many tenants. The Sentinel was printed in its upper story in 1872.

The Mason home on the hill at the south end of Bridge street is one of the oldest residences having been built in 1869. The old Jackson pigpails home on Main Street, owned by A. T. Barnett was built in 1868, and the Ben Campbell home, next lot west, was built in 1870. M. J. Stockman's residence was built in 1869. The Aldrich and Swanberg residences on Main street (the latter has been rebuilt and enlarged), were built in 1867 and 1868 respectively, and the Morgan building on Main street, near the Baptist church, was built in 1869.

Perhaps the oldest landmark is now hidden by a modern front. It is the building occupied by Mrs. Cohen's bazaar, which was built as early as 1866. The main portion of the building now stands on Main Street, in the rear of Burnett's store.

An old relic, now in good shape is the house occupied by A. B. Hahlbeer. It was built in 1870 by Capt. Clifford and W. C. Newman, now deceased, for a store.

The old Fox home, west of the Fountain City House, was built in 1867, and the west wing of the old hotel was built the same year.

The wing of the handsome Greer residence was built in 1866, and the old Ainslie home now the south wing of the Gaffick building, was built as early as 1866 by a man named Van Riper; but the Bisbee residence, on Mason Street, is as old as many of them. The small wing of the M. E. parsonage, was built in 1868, and occupied for many years as the pastor's home. The home of Hon. A. Hallara, now one of the most attractive places in town, was built early in the '70s.

The Rook home on the north side was built in 1867, and the old Dixon home, now an annex of the Inn, was erected in 1870.

The only pioneer buildings left that haunt the eye of the enterprising citizen, are the old "Dougherty and Carr" business on Bridge Street. They were built in 1868, and are now practically worthless incumbrances on valuable land.

Three fishermen named John Martin, Frank O'Donald and Henry Sandenberg, started in their fishing boat on the evening of the 14th from Beaver Harbor, at the northern end of the island, intending to sail to their home, which is some six or seven miles distant. They were loaded down to the full carrying capacity. Shortly after they had left the harbor the wind, which had been blowing strongly from the northeast all day, grew still heavier, and a very high sea was also running at the time. Since their departure no trace whatever of either boat or men has been discovered, and all hope of their safety was long since abandoned.

STATE ROAD SURVEY

We have received a private communication from our good friend Cephas Smith, Surveyor of Antrim County, which was written on "Section 1, Town 27 North of Range 8 West in Kalkaska Co." He says: "I am about starting into the woods for Harrisville, on the Harrisville and Traverse Bay State Road Survey. We are well provided with an outfit of tents and supplies, with a local State Road Commissioner, myself for surveyor, and eight assistants. In a day or two we will be beyond the settlements and may possibly "see the elephant" before we return, which will not be until we complete the survey of the Harrisville and Traverse Bay State Road. This is written by a poor camp-fire in the evening."

"Fresh Air" Misnomer, for It's Filled With Dirt and Gas.

"EVERY homeowner (one) now on hand for the comfort of "fresh air" the year 'round, without resorting to the opening of windows and doors," says the Holland Institute of Thermology, of Holland, Michigan. The institute points out that the term "fresh air" is a misnomer; that air is a permanent mixture of gases, principally oxygen and oxygen, that covers the earth in a comparatively thin layer and unlike fruits or vegetables and other organic matter, is not subject to decay or change.

"Interiors of homes and other public buildings," says the institute, become uncomfortable because the air supply may have become overheated, underheated, stagnant, or polluted with dust, odors or gases. Indoor discomforts are generally experienced during the heating season due to lack of circulation, lack of moisture, and to high and varying temperatures. During summer, discomfort is traceable to lack of air circulation, excess warmth and excess moisture.

"Any and all of these conditions may now be eliminated. This is made possible by thermostatically controlled heating systems which, more recently, are air-conditioning systems. These air-conditioners perform many functions heretofore relatively foreign to the home—they purify the air by washing and filtering it; during winter they healthfully restore the air to offset the characteristic winter dryness; they maintain moderate and uniform temperatures as desired, and keep the air in constant circulation, thus preventing stagnation and over-heated areas. In summer they are effective home cooling units, washing, cooling and circulating the indoor air.

"It is now possible to enjoy in comfort an indoor comfort the year 'round that generally will be far superior to outdoor comfort at any season of the year. There no longer is reason why dust-ridden, dry, excessive temperature during winter, and dusty, muggy, stagnant atmospheres of summer need be tolerated, for the means of inexpensively air-conditioning the home is within the reach of every person who can afford a furnace or other type central heating plant.

If you buy home materials at home and there is anything wrong, you can get hold of the merchant at once and get things adjusted. You pay for what you are dealing with a stranger at a distance. What's the use talking about. Ask the fellow who has had trouble.

If you know you are right and admit you are wrong—you are married.

Yes, you have heard about the fellow who lit a match to see if his tank was empty and found it wasn't. Also the fellow who raved to take crossing to beat the train, but didn't. Did you hear of your neighbor who bought a new roof from a smooth stranger from the big city, thinking it was better than Mule-Hide, and soon found to his grief that it wasn't? It takes only a little investigation at home to make sure before investing, and it costs you nothing to inquire.

A customer demands the best from his local dealer and gets it; has it charged for six months or so—and if there is a chance, gets an adjustment. The place where to get all of that is the best place to trade.

Though Mule-Hide roofing is beautiful in its range of colors, the greatest beauty about it is its dependability. Every bit of it carries a double guarantee. Better let us explain to you what that means. It won't cost you a cent to hear about it.

Two merchemen had a bet to be paid by the one who caught the first fish, and one went to fishing without bait, while the other would not pull in his line when he had a bite.

THE STORY

At nightfall, in the old city of New Orleans, in the year 1811, Loren Garde, recently an officer under General Jackson, is surprised by the appearance of three figures in a small, private corridor: two men and a woman. The beautiful woman bids him be waiting for the entrance of the elder of the men, who, she declares, is a duel with him with swords, and wounds him.

CHAPTER I—Continued

The gathering circle had closed in to attend the wounded man, who—as I judged from the volume of his groans—had not received a mortal thrust. "Who is the injured, Senor?" I asked.

"Adolfo de Fuentes, colonel in the Spanish army under La Torre, who is governor of Venezuela."

"Then you go," I asked, "to Venezuela?"

Before he could answer my question a huge mulatto at my elbow voiced a warning serious: "Los Gachos—look! they come!" And a narrow shuddered, justly-feared word was applied it with a shrill: "Los gatos d'arenas."

"If they should capture you, Senor?" Pedro said.

"Ye! I have only offered a man's defense."

"True, but the least, Senor, will be an awkward for Indian men, who—at times and trials and an unfortunate walk while the Seguida—"

I found his hand and gave it a warm clasp. "You will convey my regrets to the Seguida?"

"Assuredly, Senor."

"Then—adios."

"Adios, muen senarlo," he whispered, and I turned around and broke through the curious crowd.

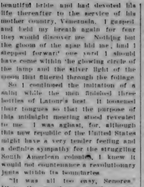
Two of the "Charlies" turned my path. I saw resolve a still armed Jab in the chest that tumbled him over and over like a performing parakeet, the other fixed his body skillfully to evade a swinging fist, then he fired point-blank at my face and missed, which was nothing unusual at all, for the gods favored me often.

Now I put my feet to the pavement and gave myself over to the business of silent running, while the rimes roared behind me. I directed my steps eastward, went north and east again into Rue Royal, and on and on, ever deeper into the French quarter, passed vine-blanketed walls which, I knew, screened many mansions and beautiful courtyards. As I ran I kept an eye searching for an odd-or-ill-hour entrance that might lead to one of these keepers of beauty, for the street itself offered no refuge.

I found, finally, a grilled gate which opened to my touch, fell under a graceful stone arch so low I had to bend my head to enter. I waited in the gloom of the archway as sounds of the hunter were by.

Silent, I crouched in the shadows long after the noises of the fusillade alone had died away, and waiting. I had a chance to view again the amazing events of this mad night, in fancy I heard again the music of the women's laugh, and I saw the white hands that pressed upon her lessened that despairing cry of "Dolfo—no! Not him!" in consternation and a fit of foolish breathing took possession of me.

I started for the oval of light that showed me the way to the street, but paused when Senora Garde in front the paved walk, blocked the passage. I found the senora was a friendly to say in the dusk of the iron gate and entered quietly, seeing in after the hustle was well quieted with the petals, although I was subject to refuge to cover them with a delicately flavored perfume.



But His Long Arm Came Down Swiftly.

thrust of his cord eyes over the edge of his wine glass. "How long since my dear Jilago," he asked then, "have you put another soul in the place we served so long for San Isidro?"

His had found me, three sharp eyes of his had sought me out! Should I run, and if so, where? There was only the house, and the garden surrounded by a wall too high for unassisted scaling. Should I offer resistance to these four men, three of whom were doubtless armed, or should I surrender peaceably? It seemed certain that the knowledge I had acquired concerning their latest would be my death warrant; they could not let me go and then continue further with their plans of recruiting.

While I considered this Diego answered: "I have put no salve in the place reserved for San Isidro, you fool, amigo."

"Sinner as salad, Diego mio." From these incidents there is a figure in the scene. The figure is taller by a shoulder than San Isidro, and to it, garbed as the modern dandy of New Orleans His hair, too, is not the dark hair of the Mexican and Spanish, but light. He laughed shortly, and came to his feet. "He is an American animal, Diego, which is strange, for I had always believed that the pagan Americans were as saints."

His mind have had the eyes of a lynx, and in his voice by murder. As the swarthy sailor came toward my hiding place, the soldier drew a gleaming pistol.

"Not here—not in here!" Diego cried, "Ves cannot kill a man in my garden. Take him—take him alive, and throw him in the river. Drown him, but do not shed him in my garden!"

Senor Sailor, his bloodshot eyes glaring stupidly, thrust his dark face within range of my fist, and I swung swiftly. It caught him fair upon the point of a heavy chin. Tumbling backward, he fell with sharp violence against the table, which overturned with a resounding crash of glass, carrying the soldier in its fall, precipitating him to his hands and knees.

The fighting blood of my sturdy Norse father raced through my veins, filling me with the lust for battle. I shut out of my retreat and, striking wildly, found the soft face of Diego, into which my fist sank sufficiently, as it were, down lavishly in the parlement of the courtyard. Madness seized me again, and I laughed aloud.

The soldier was up again. I took his gleaming blow upon the shoulder and gave him all I had with one straight right, then I turned to face the last adversary. Fragments, his long arm came down swiftly, and a steel in his hand struck my unprotected head. The trees and the hanging moss and the moon disappeared to a crimson sea. I groped blindly, and found friendly hands that let me down gently to the flagstones.

CHAPTER II

The Santa Lucrecia

I lived in a land of dreams of grotesque fancies where formless figures moved in silent aimlessness through half-transparent fog. I heard the vaguest echo of a voice, the fragment of a song, the shuffling of footsteps. Morning sunlight, streaming through a narrow, slatted portholes, executed a flaming pattern on the wall above my head. I was in a cabin of a ship; for I saw the heavy beams that held the floor of the aforedeck, and I heard the gentle creak of blocks. I felt a painful throbbing in my head and, raising a hand, touched a bandage.

A figure moved in the cabin, approached and leaned over me. About the face so near my own there was a sort of unreal malformation. One of the eyes was closed, the face-colored bone was larger by far than any bone should be, and a dreaded grin pulled the features all awry.

"Is that a real face," I asked, "or have you, too, just returned from a bat masquer?"

Wherupon the face swore a bitter Spanish oath, and I knew the owner of it for the soldier. Now the full form of Francisco bent over me. "Then you didn't shoot me in the garden of the good Diego, nor drive me in the river?"

"Is Manuel he of the dark face that resembles a bad dream?"

"Yes, Senor." He chuckled. "His face is even worse now—if such could be. He thought a moment. "You fight, Senor, as though you love to fight."

"Not at all, though sometimes it is true that the blood of my father speaks to me."

"If Venezuela had a thousand men like you, Senor," he said, and the face of the savior burned in his eyes, "she would win her independence out of hand." I found myself in no way to chide, and he went on, deep anxiety in his eyes. "To your unconsciousness, Senor, you spoke often to Her Majesty, who seems to possess strong black curls and purple moonlight in her eyes. Can we have made so vast a blunder?"

Now, in spite of the torture of my wounded head, I laughed—and groaned, and laughed again. "The child," I said, "is the daughter of my host. She—but what, may I ask, are your plans concerning me?"

Many Generations of Hapsburg Jaw and Lip

The Hapsburg jaw with its hang ing lip has been traced to 1-in 4 in Wurth, dark through eighteen generations to a long-chinned thick lipped patriarch of Hapsburg castle. His marriage to a virile woman with a lower lip that touched her chin. Since those two haughty lips came together the Hapsburgs—to Austria as well as Spain—have transmitted both the hanging lip and protruding jaw to their descendants, particularly to their male progeny.

When Philip the Handsome of Austria married Miel Johanna, daughter of Ferdinand and Isabella, it was his lips and not her title mad that dominated the dynasty which ended with Alfonso.

Whoever wishes to learn the whole story of the Hapsburg jaw and lip will find it in books on Mendelism.

In certain families, Darwin wrote, some characters "have had great power in transmitting their likeness through both sexes, for we cannot otherwise understand how the same features should so often be transmitted after marriage with various females as this from the case with the Austrian emperors."

Old Washington Cemetery

John Uhagen in Pictorial is "Washington, Past and Present," says: "Land was donated for Rock Creek church in 1703, so there was sufficient ground around the church for the cemetery, which has received the dead for over 200 years. Richard Queen also provided land for a Roman Catholic chapel near Langdon, and burials were no doubt made therein in due time. These two places are, therefore, the earliest places of interment in the district of Columbia, and the custom of providing with his graves was thus started, and continued around the early churches of the Federal city.

HELPFUL HUSBAND LARGELY A MYTH

Little Gained by Letting Him "Tinker."

Men are supposed to be handy with the hammer and good at doing odd jobs round the house, but from what I hear from women who have thing thousands I mean not immortal, it's a tradition lacking in truth. It's trusting wife asks her spouse to regale a chair leg or an electrical fixture it ceases to done quiet a size bit of expensive tools is bought. When the tools arrive he does not know how to use them. In the end the wife has to hire a workman and instead of saving money she is out the price of the tools.

One wife decided it was ridiculous to pay a carpenter to hang the porch swing when her husband and guest was were able-bodied and reasonable intelligent. The twain were willing to tool both brains and brawn, and started operations by tapping the porch roof to locate the joist. The sound told nothing to their untrained ears, so they tested eight experimental holes without ever touching the secretive beam. Eventually the lady of the house sent for a carpenter who filled up the eight holes, and hung the swing.

One summer this same father and son tried to save the family budget by building a coal bin in the basement in which to hoard coal bought at low prices. Their fears were in her work loosened the brick founda tion so the latter caved in last winter, and in the spring a brick mason repaired the damages at consid erable expense.

Then there's the woman who failed to spend $10 for an outside artist for her new radio. She insisted that her husband could save money at build ing one. Accordingly he bought the necessary material. He created in der the edge of the house to ground the wire properly, and as he was a lucky bogie he got stuck under the foundation, and pulled a Floyd Gib bons. Sympathetic neighbors dug him out and he went to bed to nurse his bruises while a riveting built the aerial. Instead of saving money he paid a doctor's bill.

The most interesting trait these helpless husbands show is their will ingness to spend hours in investigat ing a way to escape the work their wives assign to them. This tendency has led to most of our important house hold inventions. Of course it was a man who first thought of washing ironing, sweeping and heating eggs by electric power. Probably his wife asked him to help her one day when she was sick. As often as not his inventive powers lead him to grief instead of success as in the instance of the man too busy to assist out his wife's garbage can. His help the garbage in the can to the garbage door, and asked him to put it on the curb each Monday morning. There fore when he hitched the car out he would place the garbage can on the ramping board and step at the curb long enough to park the car, thus saving at least a hundred feet of un necessary car carrying. One morn ing he forgot to remove the garbage cans from the ramping board, and never gave it a thought until he made a quick stop at a pedestrian traffic intersection. There was a fearful clatter on the left of the car and he looked out in time to see his breakfast gracefully roots rolling be neath a family limousine not to men tion coffee grounds and potato peel ings strewn all over the scenery. This luckless husband has never recovered from the ramshing letter. orts complex and his wife has for garbage can which he wouldn't pos sibly stop to collect.

The final father who quest if, for a health to amuse his children on the Fourth of July "mean" well when he put it on top of the grape arbor to fire in it. His idea was to re move it as far as possible from the bodies of his young hopefuls. It fell off and exploded in his wife's fa vorite flower bed, spanning the jolie of her life and sending morsels of land later.

There are some women who can do more with a hairpin than the son of the fellow is accomplish with his most useful tools. The vaunted sup riority of the male in all mechanical matters often has to bow to the as sistel of Dinker. Sometimes it agrees to take the hand of the house behind the newspaper, and hire outsiders to take care of repairs. It's cheaper in the long run to pay one bill instead of several.—Indianapolis News

FIRST HIGHWAY OF STEEL IN AMERICA

Horse Railway in Massachusetts Pioneer.

It is common knowledge that the first railroad in the United States and, in fact, in the world, was that of the United Gravities works at Quincy, Mass., in 1826. During the next several years numerous enterprises were made to get railroading started well. A commission of the Massachusetts legislature convened in 1825 on the possibility of constructing a railway from Boston to New York and advised that "animal power is better adapted."

The record of the Massachusetts legislature in 1827 reveal that the project of a railroad from Boston to the Hudson river was held on to ridicule by our solons on account of the high costs of a railroad across the hills to Worcester and Berkshire was the extravagance to suppose anything but to be laughed at. As late as 1830 a prominent man in Boston declared that he would not live to see a steamer where it was impossible to build railroads.

Despite early opposition however railroading soon began in earnest. In 1830 the Mississippi, Hudson and the Boston & Lowell railroad were opened and 250 charters of one sort or another for all or a part were offering of 1000 shares. The attempt of the Lowell railroad aroused a heavy slump in Middlesex county stock.

Close behind the Lowell railroad came the roads to Worcester and Providence. The first locomotive ever in service in Boston was on the Boston & Worcester road in the spring of 1834. Cars were built on by so as Newton and the company decided to change the motive power from horses to steam. In June, 1835, the engine driver inspected from Englewood to take charge of the foreign born locomotive. In June, 1835, the railroad was completed to Worcester. The opening took some of the pleasures away from Boston by New York and Albany railroad. Then came the Hudson river railroad, which opened the first day before the Fourth of July, 1851. The road was completed to Albany on the 27th of June, 1852.

The Boston & Worcester was soon placed through to Albany in 1841 and the route was referred to as the Fitchburg road, was opened as a railroad between Boston and Fitchburg in 1845. Then came the Western railroad, which was the extension of the Boston & Albany railroad, which was the extension of the Boston & Albany railroad, which was the extension of the Boston & Albany

By GEORGE BECK

THE young man with a strong grip, the young man with who has the time to learn the science of flying, though he may not be better than an apple to Uncle Sam who operates the finest aviation schools in the country.

At fifteen army fields throughout the United States this year there has assembled at present over 3,000 reserve officers whose training expenses far exceed, per man the cost in any other branch of service. For the privilege extended the reserve flier, the value of the training he gets, the good times he has, and hard facts Uncle Sam requires in return in an intelligent, industrious young man between the ages of twenty and twenty-seven who can hit at least two years of college education and who has the markings of a flier in him.

In an exclusive interview the writer had for this article with Captain Frank M. Hawks, 1926 returned from a spectacular tour of Europe in his speedy Lockheed-Vega, the Texaco 13, Hawks declared there was an urgent need for more and better trained pilots in this country.

The fine designing of planes, he said, and the necessary continued study of aeronautical science generally, particularly with respect to training of aviators, holds the future of aviation in this country.

Hawks firmly believes in the coming of high-speed planes for commercial use for passenger transportation after the war is waged. He says, is the future of flying. In fact he believes in it for all future transportation between land and air.

"The day is coming," he said "when we shall ride in planes that travel 200 miles an hour, trains that move at 100 m. p. h. and we will drive our automobiles over express highways at 60 and 70 miles an hour. Does that sound impossible? Then consider it as the idle dream of a speed demon who likes to sit back in an easy chair and visualize through the smoke rings of his cigar, new speed pictures of tomorrow."

"Primarily," says Captain Hawks "the glider has sound fundamental values. Unquestionably it offers a very safe and inexpensive means to student aviators for instruction. The novice in flying gets a lesson of technique and a better knowledge of aerodynamics. In the first few tender hops of flying he can learn a great deal more with a glider than with a powered-driven plane. He is not depending upon the skill of the engineering express of air, the action of the controls; he is depending more upon real flying as it is taught on a glider, by the proper tactics of landing that he makes in a forced landing because he has an engine, or by the proper tactics of approaching fields, and landing on marks in boxes.

"The novice receives the thrill of his life on his first glider flight, though its duration may be only half a minute; he gains a decided feeling of power later when, after he draws it higher, alone. I have observed many students make their first solo flights with a noticeable change in the tempo from distance. Those students who thought they had reduced all the thrills and sport of aviation through power driven planes were here to glorify the thrills to a new top. There's just as much skill required and just as much thrill and fun indulged in gliding as in speeding through the air at double express train speed.

The object of the flight of the Texaco Eagle, in which Captain Hawks was towed from Roosevelt Field to Paris a year ago by 2 1/2 ("Lucky") Lindbergh, Jr., who flew the Wasp Texaco 7, was to stimulate interest in gliding, which is fast is a cheap and safe stepping stone in powered machines, provided, of course, that proper instruction is first given the student. Obviously, no student will become reasonably free enough in control in relation to air intelligence, industrious young man between the ages of twenty and twenty-seven who can hit at least two years of college education and who has the markings of a flier in him.

"Primarily," says Captain Hawks "the glider has sound fundamental values. Unquestionably it offers a very safe and inexpensive means to student aviators for instruction. The novice in flying gets a lesson of technique and a better knowledge of aerodynamics. In the first few tender hops of flying he can learn a great deal more with a glider than with a powered-driven plane. He is not depending upon the skill of the engineering express of air, the action of the controls; he is depending more upon real flying as it is taught on a glider, by the proper tactics of landing that he makes in a forced landing because he has an engine, or by the proper tactics of approaching fields, and landing on marks in boxes.

"The novice receives the thrill of his life on his first glider flight, though its duration may be only half a minute; he gains a decided feeling of power later when, after he draws it higher, alone. I have observed many students make their first solo flights with a noticeable change in the tempo from distance. Those students who thought they had reduced all the thrills and sport of aviation through power driven planes were here to glorify the thrills to a new top. There's just as much skill required and just as much thrill and fun indulged in gliding as in speeding through the air at double express train speed.

The object of the flight of the Texaco Eagle, in which Captain Hawks was towed from Roosevelt Field to Paris a year ago by 2 1/2 ("Lucky") Lindbergh, Jr., who flew the Wasp Texaco 7, was to stimulate interest in gliding, which is fast is a cheap and safe stepping stone in powered machines, provided, of course, that proper instruction is first given the student. Obviously, no student will become reasonably free enough in control in relation to air intelligence, industrious young man between the ages of twenty and twenty-seven who can hit at least two years of college education and who has the markings of a flier in him.

In an exclusive interview the writer had for this article with Captain Frank M. Hawks, 1926 returned from a spectacular tour of Europe in his speedy Lockheed-Vega, the Texaco 13, Hawks declared there was an urgent need for more and better trained pilots in this country.

The fine designing of planes, he said, and the necessary continued study of aeronautical science generally, particularly with respect to training of aviators, holds the future of aviation in this country.

Hawks firmly believes in the coming of high-speed planes for commercial use for passenger transportation after the war is waged. He says, is the future of flying. In fact he believes in it for all future transportation between land and air.

"The day is coming," he said "when we shall ride in planes that travel 200 miles an hour, trains that move at 100 m. p. h. and we will drive our automobiles over express highways at 60 and 70 miles an hour. Obviously, no student will become reasonably free enough in control in relation to air intelligence, industrious young man between the ages of twenty and twenty-seven who can hit at least two years of college education and who has the markings of a flier in him.

But here again, Captain Hawks has ideas: If a "sticker" motor of two cylinders is developed to drive a glider efficiently and safely, a new immediate and valuable step in aviation will have been accomplished. Says Hawks further:

"It has been a few observations which have convinced me that the so-called primary glider with its skeleton fuselage, inefficient wings and controls, has no place in the picture of American gliding activities. I would rather see boys men start their glider work with the secondary or utility type of glider.

"I am opposed to the automatic launching device which spring tension snaps the glider into the air with such violence that it is not only unmotivated but extremely dangerous to even an experienced pilot. I believe that gliders and soarers must be taken seriously by either those experienced in flying or by students. It is a real art, not as simple to accomplish as it seems, and cannot be taken lightly. Gliding, in my opinion, be safe if properly supervised and instructed all through."

If gliders remain only gliders they will still impart the fundamentals of flying, and from them the student may step to a fledgling aeroplane and meet the "horses" that drive it, their sights, progress is obviously gradual, but sure. Out of such a sort it is easy to visualize the emergence of a new crop of aviators who might very quickly revolutionize diplomacy in veteran style of today.

At Mitchell Field, Long Island, one of the army flying fields where reserve training is carried on there are planes reserved every weekend throughout the year for the use of reserve corps officers. This is the case at nearly all the army flying fields. It is the privilege of the officer and also of the non-flying Air Reserve corps requirement in fly an army plane a certain number of hours every month.

Once a year the reserve corp officers train for two week periods at the army fields throughout the country. At New York the concentration sometimes composed of officers of the Second Corps area camp at the Long Island field during the summer. At fields in the south and southwest reserve corps training is carried on throughout the year.

Lectures by regular army aviation officials cover such subjects as radio communication and equipment, navigation, cross country flying and actual maneuvers with patrolmen engaged in their tasks, a strict area regulation, the fliers put these latter subjects to actual practice in the air in addition to formation and observation flying.

There are also two primary aviation schools in Texas and California and one advanced school at Kelly field, San Antonio, Texas. The graduates of the reserve school goes in the regular army for two years as a commissioned officer and increased pay.

Out of some several thousand applicants to the basic flying schools every year, a few hundred are enrolled for the primary training. Less than half of these succeed in obtaining their diploma, commission and license as a reserve army flier. Thus just June 30 sixty cadets received their "wings" at Kelly field and were assigned to army fields throughout the country. A few days before 275 applicants were selected in basic training.

Trained in both the primary and advanced schools give the cadet 225 hours in the air with the necessary auxiliary subjects of meteorology, airplane-engines, navigation, radio, aerial gunnery and other academic and field subjects for military pilots.

Besides strict physical examinations to determine whether or not the cadet is going to make a fine he is put through tests which are described as psychological by the instructors. He needs, they maintain, a co-ordination to give him "an even temper" and "air sense."

One of the cadet's first experiences which is almost as frightening as his first solo flight is a tryout in an "instrument" a mechanical device which snares and revolves him through every possible and impossible way a plane will make in the air.

It resembles the cockpit of a plane and in that the cadet sits. The mechanism is dual-controlled, that is, the cadet operates controls similar to those of an airplane and the instructor sitting outside of the device operates a control panel which reacts through its actions. The instructor, who gets a certain enjoyment out of these tests, no doubt, tries to upset the equilibrium of the cadet while the cadet tries to maintain it.

Soon after the cadet wears actual dual flying. After a few days of leisurely drill and other preliminary studies to put in the mind of the cadet that he is one of Uncle Sam's aeronautical students, within the first week he finds himself with his instructor ready for his initial flight. The cadet is getting his first lesson—to have full confidence in his instructor in order to put this over the instructor goes through a few spins and rolls until, in some cases, a cadet is about ready to crawl in his teacher's pocket. Another purpose of this flight is to have the cadet "feel out the situation" of flying for he is following before he starts soaring on hop hauling plane.

The flying is done in the morning and the ground schooling in the afternoon of a day that lasts from 6:30 until 4:30.

His next reaction, the cadet is told, is for "air work." It consists of straight flying, spins, banks, forced landings and the course lasts ten flying hours. In the forced landing instruction, the instructor kills the engine while the plane is in some precarious position or inclinity and the cadet must glide to the ground safely. A careless accident on this part will promptly eliminate him from the cadet ranks.

His next trial is a solo hop around the field watched closely by his instructor on the ground. And when the cadet returns safely to the field, even though he has shown, possibly, great skill in handling his first flight, he is greeted with, "Well, did ya bring that plane back without smashing it up," by his instructor. The purpose of this is to keep the cadets's pilot from getting a "swelled head."

By E. C. TAYLOR

The Bandit's Nemesis

JAMES CURRY was the most noted of all the stage coach drivers on the old Barnes-Kilkenny line when Wisconsin was little more than a wilderness and the roads were quagmires and rough, rocky trails through the forests.

Tall and fearless, Curry's word was law along the stage line, and his Scandinavians and the respect in which the new inhabitants of the country held him proved the undoing of one of the most desperate bandits and gunmen in the old Northwest.

Curry's stretch of the road was miles of sandy trail north of Baraboo. He drove coaches past this route from 1858 until the Chicago & North Western railroad extended its line from Kilkenny to Baraboo in 1871. During the last nine years of this period he owned the stage coach line and ran it himself through the "hard" seasons.

In the late 60's the entire country was lively in rage of the Westerns, one of the most notable hamlets in the interior of the American frontier. That was leader of a band of lawless men who struggled to stay either to do his business.

Hardison was already a thirteen months, and the railroad line ran to Kilkenny. The stage coach line made its chief revenue by carrying money from the railroad at Kilkenny to various towns, the county, but principally to the bank at Baraboo. The people trusted Curry so greatly that they never thought of having their packages of money insured, and many a farmer or housewife would turn money over to him after stopping his coach along the road, and have him pay their bills, or buy things for them at Kilkenny or Baraboo.

Curry received 50 cents for each fifteen cash he transported across the country. One night he was handed $72,000, to be carried to the Terrell Thomas bank at Baraboo. Just as he was leaving two strangers crawled in on the stage coach, sat in the rear seats and conversed in whispers.

As the stage crossed the river and entered a section thick with pine woods, the two strangers suddenly began talk in low tones.

Curry recalled that Pat Wilder's body and his gang were three miles back at tracked S. S States and his wife near the same spot, and while the sheriff's posses were hunting Pat, a pal of the bandit chief had murdered Gates at Lonely Pine, a spot on the road.

Curry whipped up his horses, fully convinced that beside the $72,000 in cash he was carrying two of Pat's gang in his own coach. Those tensions included

Better Varieties of Fruit Needed

Dr. P. P. Hedrick, director of the New York state experiment station and for many years in charge of the station's fruit investigations, when asked by the American Agriculturist to name some of the important problems confronting the fruit grower, stated that in his opinion economic problems were the most pressing but also more and better varieties of fruit should be grown and better utilization made of culls.

Citing the need for legislation to get agriculture on the same economic basis as industry and for development of marketing facilities and the reduction of unprofitable acreages in fruit, Doctor Hedrick said in part: "Too few varieties of the several fruits are grown. Of the many kinds that might be grown in our fruit regions of promise in the several regions, we now find on the market but a half-dozen varieties of apples, two or three kinds of pears the Elberta peach, the Montmorency cherry, the Concord grape, and so on. Were more sorts grown with different flavors and colors and for different seasons and purposes, fruit growing would be greatly stimulated.

"There, too, there are too few good sorts of our fruit. The introduction of new and better kinds of fruit in the years to come will have a great influence in establishing fruit growing. Also there are too many culls, and too few wide-awake cities. Perhaps 20 per cent of the fruit produced in America goes to waste from preventable causes, such as insect pests, poor orchard management, etc. There will always be culls and poor fruits, but the percentage need not be nearly so large as it is, and better means must be found for using cull fruits."

Remember These Points When Storing Apples

First, properly ripened fruit that is to be kept during the winter should be hand picked. Apples should not be left to fall to the ground, but the operation must not be nearly so large as it is, and better means must be found for using cull fruits."

Second, handle the fruit with care, so as not to bruise them before they are packed. Only sound apples, free from disease, should be selected.

Third, apples should not be stored in bins. Basket baskets and the commercial barrel are the most satisfactory for storage than the larger containers.

Fourth, as soon as the fruit has been picked and placed in baskets, it should be put in a cool place. If only a few barrels are to be stored in the fall, the cellar is usually satisfactory, but if large quantities are to be stored, a special fruit cellar or storage house should be built. Such a cellar has a concrete floor, it is built so as to be well ventilated, so that the apples do not shrivel.—Michigan Farmer.

Importance of Pruning

Pruning is one of the most important of all orchard operations. Great success in orchard work can be accomplished by proper pruning, and perhaps more damage done by indifferent pruning than by almost any other orchard practice. The basis of all pruning is based upon the fundamental principles of plant growth; the practices of pruning are governed by the habit of growth of the particular purpose for which the fruit is to be grown. In pruning a tree to develop a strong, well-proportioned tree, to modify its shape and growth to natural, local conditions; to satisfy economic requirements as to size and quality, and to maintain the tree in vigorous productions and the characteristic habit of fruit, to maintain the full vigor and health of the tree.

Imported Seeds Colored

Color, dominant in the commercial world today, is used for the protection of the American farmer in determining the origin of imported alfalfa seed, says the United States Department of Agriculture.

Federal law requires coloring of all imported alfalfa seed. Ordinarily seed is dyed a purple to the seed. Alfalfa seed from South America must be dyed green, and that from Canada red. That from Africa and Turkestan must be dyed yellow. Seed from Chile and that from Canada 1 per cent Irridescent violet. All other imported seed must be stained, if sold in this country.

Red clover seed must be colored with under different treatments at the discretion of the owner; pinnate from one to five colors, in addition of miles: Mercury 36, Venus 67.2, Earth 92.9, Mars 141.5, Jupiter 483.8, Saturn 886.1 Uranus, 1,782.8, Neptune 2,793.4, Our satellite the moon is 238,840 miles and her mass about 1-81st that of the earth.

Valuable Tropical Food

Plantain (Musa paradisiaca) is a species of banana, the fruit of which is a staple article of food in the tropics. It is larger than the ordinary banana, greenish yellow in color, less sweet and more starchy. It is cooked in various ways.

Sea Reclaimed Islands

A scientist states that the Bermuda islands, which now have a land area of about 20 square miles, once covered about 300 square miles.

FARM POULTRY

KEEPING TAB ON AGES OF CHICKS

Good Reasons Why Matter Is Important.

The question may arise in the minds of some as to why it is necessary to be able to tell the differences in ages of pullets.

The answer is that when it is time to pen the pullets in the laying house, there are some are not worth keeping. These should be sorted out, and it is well to keep all of the same age and development by themselves. The earliest maturing pullets are usually the best ones.

If pullets of all ages are allowed to run together on range, it will be impossible to tell the difference between the early and late hatches. Naturally, such birds are not all of the same value and should not be placed in the same pen.

Unless pullets are hatching and breeding are done and all chicks hatched, such pullets cannot easily be told apart. They can easily be sorted by the pinching or slitting the webs between the toes. In this way any difference in conformation it is a very simple matter to know definitely the ages of the various pullets.

Poultry House Litter Carrier Has Advantage

In some of the newer commercial poultry houses a litter carrier and track has been installed to great advantage. The track is supported from the rafters, just in front of the dropping boards. The carrier when in position is just right to receive the droppings as they are scraped from the boards.

The track may be extended through the house if the doors between units are arranged properly. At the end, or at both ends the track can be extended to the outside again. The litter carrier made a good growth on all plots treated with lime and phosphate. Those receiving fertilizer in addition to the limestone made the heaviest growth.

Feeding Silage Returns

During the winter of 1925-'26 two lots of yearling steers at the Madison (Wisconsin) experimental farm, Ohio, showed returns of $71.60 per acre for corn when fed in form of silage and $50.80 when a similar area was fed as shelled corn and stover. The following year an acre of corn when fed as silage returned profit of $76.66 and a similar area returned profit of $67.05 when fed half full feed of silage and as much shelled corn as the cattle wished.—Michigan Farmer.

Care of Ducks

When duck eggs are hatched in an incubator, the temperature should be 102 degrees during the first week. For the remainder of the hatch, it should be held as near as possible to 101 degrees. The thermometer bulb should be placed in the top of the duck eggs.

During the last ten days of the hatch the eggs can be sprinkled daily with water which is near the room temperature. The eggs will usually begin to pip the 26th day and the hatch is done about the 28th day. Hit if moisture appears lacking and the ducklings are drowning while emerging. It may be best to open the machine and add moisture. If possible, you should obtain the incubator instructions for hatching ducklings in the type of machine you have. Often the best results can be obtained by following the manufacturer's directions advised by the manufacturer.

Poultry Hints

The first chat the poultry industry can expand or contract rapidly with a minimum loss or gain is the chicken.

Artificial light in the poultry house makes a normal condition during an abnormal season. It is not a precious process, if used with reasonable judgment.

The careful selection of pullets into laying units and the improvement and feeding in laying flocks during the winter months, more economical, and more exact.

A poultry man who continuously selects his breeding hens from the most productive group in his flock, may expect a higher egg production during the late summer and early fall.

Many poultrymen find that night lighting of baby chicks increases the growth since the chicks eat and drink at night.

Do not scald your apples before picking for market. Learn to dry-pick. They have a much better appearance and will keep longer. Scalded apples or three days later than dry-picked were scalded before picking.

Bacillary white diarrhea of chicks can be controlled by testing breeding hens and eliminating the germ carriers.

Culling should be a continuous process, starting at the time chicks are removed from the hatchery and extending over the entire laying period.

According to Canadian government reports, 34,980,958 hens in Canada laid 4,086,595,000 dozen eggs in 1925, valued at $85,380,922.

Putting the Neck Into the Collar

By THOMAS AKELE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

Charles was having his portrait painted, and as he moved from one foot to another trying to keep the blood circulating through his limbs as he stood, he became interested in the progress of the artist. The face he painted was easily recognized by the most difficult. After that had the proper expression worked out and the natural flesh tints applied, he turned to the collar and tie.

"One of the most difficult things," the painter said, "is to get the neck to come up finely and evenly against the collar."

It made me think of Moses, our old gray horse. One of the most difficult tasks I had as a boy on the farm was to get Moses to bring his neck up against the collar firmly and easily. I tried all sorts of devices with only indifferent results. I understand exactly what the artist had in mind.

In other things besides portrait painting and the driving of a lazy horse, I have noticed difficulty in making the athletic union between the neck and the collar. Gilmore has been greatly concerned about his son's progress in college, and he had an interview with me not long ago to see if I could suggest any remedy or reason for the situation. It was difficult. It is simply another case of an unsatisfactory and cautious adjustment of the neck and the collar.

Hawley is quite nimble life. He is recognized everywhere as a man who has made a great success of his profession. Those who know him say that when the time came to begin work in the morning Hawley was always there, enthusiastic and eager for the day's task. He never watched the clock to see how time was passing; he wasn't afraid of work. It was in reality one of the great components of his life that there was work to do and that he was privileged to do it. There was no inactivity union between Hawley's neck and the collar.

Medieval Plague Stone

Ogbourne St. Peter's stone, at the corner of Burton lane, York, is a railed-in stone, which has traces of five cavities in its upper surface. The middle hole formerly held the stem of a wayside cross, which carried the light of a "lanthorn" of the city during the great plague of 1625 and 1604. The surrounding four holes were designed to hold an elementary extinguisher in which the ordinary money was placed before being taken away by the country people who brought supplies.

The Burton stone is certainly one of the earliest relics of the practice of quinquelies in this part of the country, for it was probably in existence long before the terrible outbreak of plague ravaged York and carried off over 3,500 citizens. It is quite possible that it was the plague stone during earlier visitations of the dreaded scourge.

The Burton stone, on a wayside cross, was the point at which the lord mayor, sheriff and aldermen used to ride through to the city's mural arms when the latter marched forth to war. It marked the tour of the municipal authorities when the forest of thirteen swept up to the very walls of the old city.

Many a condemned criminal must have died with an expression of fear on his face engraved in his brain, for it would be one of the last objects he saw are he swung into eternity from the Abbot's gallows at the Knavesmire, Micklegate.

It cannot be said with certainty when the four ironic were cut into the base of the Burton cross. The dreadful "Black Death" visited York in 1340, and regret practically unbroken from Ascension day until July. Forty-two years later it recured, and the toll of death is stated to have been 11,000.

The year 1485 saw another pestilence sweeping over the city, and in 1563, the "Sweating Sickness" overran the whole country, and was severely felt in York.

Of the various crosses which served York as plague stones during its periods of affliction, the base of the Burton stone appears to be the only remaining memorial.—Montreal Herald.

Add New Ocean Lane to Old Routes

Hudson Bay Trail Will Have but Short Season.

Washington.—The passage this autumn of the first commercial cargo of wheat from Churchill, the newly opened port on Hudson bay, to London, lays down the latest and probably the northernmost steamer lane of importance that will ever come the Atlantic ocean, according to a bulletin from the National Geographic society.

"The long-hoped-for day in the existence of a passage south of the equator sufficiently free from ice to permit regular ocean navigation for several months each year has arrived," the bulletin points out. The Hudson bay steamer route is free from ice to the western mind for only a short period late each summer and early each fall; but because ships using the route can reach dim or more miles closer to the great European wheat fields than by the St. Lawrence-Great Lakes route, it is believed that the newest steamer lane will be crowded with ships each autumn.

First Ocean Trail.

"A constant northern procession of shipping lanes across the Atlantic can be noted since Columbus led the way between the Old and New worlds," continues the bulletin. "The famous trail-blazing trip first advised the northwestern corridor of Africa to the Canary Islands, and then led almost due west, a little north of the Tropic of Cancer, the landfall at Watling island. From this experimental voyage Columbus learned something of the life of the land in the West Indies, and on his next voyage he continued southward from the Canaries to the larger West Indian islands.

"This diagonal line which the great admiral thread from near the northern edge of Africa in the Azilites became the route of the Spanish galleons and the settlers of the Spanish Main.

"South of the Spanish ship lane, the Portuguese established a route between the western coasts of Europe and Africa and the eastern coast of Brazil. This is still the map of the major Atlantic lanes.

"Except a few line luxury traveled shipping routes such as those between Portugal and the mouth of the Amazon, France and French Guiana, and Holland and Dutch Guiana, the trans-atlantic trade lanes have been traced north of the old Spanish ocean highway. Toledo Man Makes Life-Saving Profession

Toledo, Ohio.—Life-saving is a profession to George Ralfe, who has saved from drowning 17 persons in the Maumee river.

He was four when he saved his own, and he has been saving people ever since. Ralfe says he keeps a reel boat and guided linearly to shore after he has made a rescue.

When he was six he rescued a playmate who had fallen into the river, and left it to George to drag him out. Since then he has been saving people.

Ralfe is employed by the city engineer's office, but he says he would be willing to give up his job for a position as lifeguard at some bathing beach. He has passed the "corpse" sitting up, very much alive, although grotesque. From then on it has been one rescue after an other.

Artistic and Historic Articles Hidden Away.

New York.—Those who think the days of hidden treasures are ended will get a swift awakening at a list of valuable articles which have been completed by E. Alexander Powell, includes paintings, tapestries, statues, rugs, jewels, furniture and ornaments that Mr. Powell solemnly insists that glimmery more still be hidden and, if this country and abroad—articles not listed in the regular catalogues of value many times that of all that are taken by Captain Kidd. Among the Morgan and other treasures of free-booting days.

These treasures he discovered in the most unsuspected places—in the musty garrets of New England farmhouses, in fisherman's shacks, English taverns, German castles, in buried caches and beneath the sand of African deserts and in native huts on South Sea islands.

A country store in New England yield some relic of Eighteenth century scenic wall paper, printed from wood en blocks by hand, which brought the finder a small fortune.

A Californian discovered one of the greatest of Murillo's paintings amid the discarded rubbish in a Paris store room, where it had lain unrecognized for generations. It is valued at $100,000. A traveler in the South Seas found painted on the bark of a native tree, but in Tahiti a priceless group of primitives by Paul Gauguin, the eccentric French artist who exiled himself to the Pacific Islands.

THIMBLERIGGERS ARE STILL AT IT

When Congress passed the Liberty loan acts, it provided that portions of the borrowing thus made from the American people, might be invested in the bonds of foreign nations then associated in the World War with the United States.

The Liberty Loan bonds were then sold to the American people under this representation. Unfortunately, bonds of the Allies were not taken, but demand notes or mere verbal agreements to pay.

After the war the drive for the cancellation of American loans to Europe was begun by private interests which had made loans to these countries at higher rates of interest, which could most easily be made good by taking money out of the pockets of American people by way of these cancellations.

To illustrate how completely the American people were robbed at that time it was represented that France had been bankrupted by the war and was unable to pay. We forgave all of the French debt except that which it was represented after the Armistice. Today France has a larger gold reserve in proportion to her population than any other nation, has no unemployment and is the most prosperous nation next to the United States in the world.

Now the ballyhoo for complete cancellation is on, despite the fact that the World War cost the United States more than it did any other country in the world, and we are suffering the after-effects of that great waste. The leaders in the movement again are the international bankers who have made big and profitable loans in Europe, which they are not proposing to remit or reduce. Their following is among befuddled altruists and idealists who imagine they are serving some good cause, rather than playing the dupe to commercial exploiters.

It is about time for Americans to begin a return to common sense. After all, it is clear, we are not in position to carry the whole world on our backs. The business of American statesmanship and of American patriotism is to see that our country and its people get fair play. The international bankers have already got this country into such a fix that the job of looking after its welfare looks big enough. Add looking after its welfare to the most important service we will be similar to those of the Germans recently described by a newspaper correspondent: "Cleanliness, order, frugality, these are what immediately strike you in entering a poor German home. . . . There will be growing flowers on the window sill, the carpetless floor will be scrubbed white, the curtains will be clean, everything will be placed in such regimental order that the tiny room will seem airy, convenient, and livable."

Certainly American housewives can be counted on to make their homes cheerful, clean, and comfortable, even in the face of a depression. A well ordered home helps to combat the discouragements and disappointments that many wage-earners meet almost daily. Such a standard of living, does not involve expense. The supplies needed are of the cheapest. But it takes character to use them.

A POLITICAL SAGE ON THE PRIMARY

There are those who will suspect that the real purpose of the booklet now in circulation, "Forty Years in Public Life in Illinois," is not the commemoration of that event, but the starting of a gubernatorial boom for David E. Shanahan, Chicagoan, member of the house at Springfield since 1894 and speaker of it for the last six terms. But whatever the motive, the booklet is worth reading for it is a very human document and record of the change that has taken place in politics since 1879.

That was the year that Mr. Shanahan was called upon to serve as clerk of elections and shortly thereafter he entered into the field of practical politics. He has seen and served with such familiar figures as "Uncle Joe" Cannon, Governor Tanner, Governor Oglesby, "Long" Jones, Logan and Farwell. He has "gone through all the periods of politics, from the soap-box primary, through all the reformations up to the present direct primary." Out of this wealth of experience has come the conclusion that the direct primary of today produces poorer results in the way of proper leadership than did the party convention. Here is his opinion:

"I think party leaders were more careful in the selection of candidates in the old days than they are now, because one hundred men will make better selections than one thousand; twenty-five men will make better selections than one hundred, ten men will make better selections than twenty-five; three men will make better selections than the ten, and the one man will make the best selections because he knows the responsibility is upon him.

"One man debates longer, he is more fearful of mistakes than one hundred would be; the 'buck', so to speak, cannot be passed from one to the other. When you get into a thousand, it is a deal. Always, when you can fix responsibility definitely, you get better results. The old party convention gave the party better representation geographically and racially, which is very important in a large State or in a large municipality."

NO SLUMP IN CLEANLINESS

There is some anxiety among the advocates of high standards of living lest the decreased income of the day may be reflected in the mode of daily life. Discouragement, as well as straitened circumstances, they fear, may lead to neglected homes and to general carelessness.

Such fears should prove to be entirely without foundation. The love of cleanliness and order is too well established in American character to be discarded by temporary financial difficulties. It is more likely that our own reactions will be similar to those of the Germans recently described by a newspaper correspondent: "Cleanliness, order, frugality, these are what immediately strike you in entering a poor German home. . . . There will be growing flowers on the window sill, the carpetless floor will be scrubbed white, the curtains will be clean, everything will be placed in such regimental order that the tiny room will seem airy, convenient, and livable."

Certainly American housewives can be counted on to make their homes cheerful, clean, and comfortable, even in the face of a depression. A well ordered home helps to combat the discouragements and disappointments that many wage-earners meet almost daily. Such a standard of living, does not involve expense. The supplies needed are of the cheapest. But it takes character to use them.

HIS LAST PUBLIC SERVICE

In paying a last tribute to the late Thomas A. Edison, nothing more impressive can be said than to repeat what was probably his last public statement, flashed by radio from his laboratory in Fort Myers, Florida, to the National Electric Light Association last summer, at Atlantic City. His words which follow show his interest in humanity which he had served so long and faithfully. In these difficult times they should be engraved on the consciousness of every American citizen.

"My message to you is to be courageous. I have lived a long time. I have seen history repeat itself again and again. I have seen many depressions in business. Always America has come out strong and more prosperous. Be as brave as your fathers were before you. Have faith—go forward."

CRIME THEORISTS

Crime is a matter in which the theorists have run rampant—usually at the expense of real crime prevention.

The anti-gun laws are a good example of this. It is pointed out that occasionally someone uses a gun with which to criminally kill or injure someone else. Ergo, legislate against guns.

That is all very well. What is not pointed out is that for each gun used for a criminal purpose, a thousand or ten thousand are used by honest citizens for protection or sport. It is also not pointed out that anti-gun laws, from the standpoint of enforcement, have always been something of a joke. The criminal has managed, under all circumstances, to easily obtain weapons. He probably even favors such legislation which only disarms the populace he preys upon.

If we are to legislate against guns, we may just as well legislate against knives, axes, automobiles, ropes and such household medicines as iodine. All of these have been, and can be, used in the commission of crime. It is true that they have useful and innocent purposes. But so have guns.

A TEMPLE OF JUSTICE OF YESTERYEAR

Once upon a time the official jurisdiction of this old court house, in Winchester, Virginia reached into far Western wilds, the central city of which is now called Chicago. There is no record within its walls however that any sheriff had the hardihood to venture that far on official business.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

The recent British election brings to the Nationalist government the most complete victory in the history of British elections may well be an important step upward out of the worldwide depression. A few weeks ago a great many people were fearful that Great Britain was about to be engulfed in a wave of financial chaos. There were rumors of mutiny in the British navy, the budget was unbalanced and the country had to go off the gold standard. The British Empire had apparently come to the parting of the ways.

That there was a real national crisis, that the nation was faced with the choice of a return to fundamentalism or chaos, is not to be doubted. In the best, the inherent patriotism of the British people asserted itself, and the result was the most decisive blow for nationalism and against international socialism in the history of the country. That this occurred need not surprise those who are in any way familiar with the history of Great Britain. Separated from the mainland by water, the British people were able to form a nation, long before the same thing was possible on the continent. As an island nation the people early became convinced that their national safety rested on a foundation of unity and national defense. National defense took the form of the most powerful navy in the world.

As a result, British traditions in centuries old, and for many generations the people have been convinced that their very existence depended on their national unity and their British traditions. So successful were the efforts of the people that the little island country grew to be an empire on which the sun never set. National traditions of safety were therefore reinforced by national pride. Of late there have been indications that the British empire might disintegrate, that Great Britain might lose its place as the clearing house of the world's business. Whether or not this is true, the fact remains that when the British people realized that their nationalism, and their place in the world was threatened by economic disaster, and realized the cause of this threatened disintegration, they spoke in no uncertain terms at the ballot-box. The sweeping endorsement of conservatism in government was the result.

There is a lesson for America in this election. The time may come, perhaps sooner than many of us realize, when we will be faced with a choice between fundamental principles of government and national disintegration. Will our answer be as decisive as that of Great Britain? It is true that we have written a glorious history in the short time allotted to us as a nation. We do not possess centuries of tradition and national unity, as found in Great Britain, but we do have, or had until recently, an American spirit which linked us as no danger and no handicap. The great heart of America is still sound, still adheres to the fundamental principles of American government. But there are abroad in the land forces of disintegration, as powerful as those which almost wrecked havoc in Great Britain. We have men in high places, so called intellectuals, who sneer at patriotism, who decry the teaching of history from an American standpoint, who would destroy our national defense and our constitutional government.

At present they seem to be getting the space in the newspapers, and a great deal more attention than they deserve. What will be the result be? If we are to meet the crisis as Great Britain has met it, when our hour as a nation strikes, is it not necessary that we have a revival of real patriotism, and of national thought? There is too much internationalism abroad in the land, too much philosophy which has its roots in Eastern Europe rather than in the soil of America. When we get back to preaching first principles, and acting them as well as preaching them, in our legislation, in our business, and in our home and social life, things will once more adjust themselves and the good ship America will move forward again.

Pertinent Paragraphs

It is better to prevent a crime than to punish someone for having committed it. And, on the same principle, it is better to enforce a few basic laws than to pass new and restrictive laws which are unenforceable, and serve only to make lawbreakers of otherwise law-abiding citizens.

A handful of new Congressmen were elected to fill vacancies a few days ago. The Democrats got the most favorable breaks and admittedly they will control the next Congress, which means that they will elect their Speaker and officers of the House. The most important part of their victory is that they will have their majorities on the different committees, and Democrats will replace Republicans as chairmen of the different committees. So make up your mind that the lower house will be Democratic.

The steamer Illinois, bound for Chicago Saturday had 8,000 bushels of potatoes on board.

The report of the United States lake survey engineers of the mean depth of the great lakes for the month of October, shows that Lake Superior has gone down in one year almost half a foot; Lake Michigan and Lake Huron about a little over one-tenth of a foot, and the two latter lakes have gained but a very small fraction over the depth of 1895, when the water was very low over these lakes. Lake Erie has also gone down almost half a foot in a year, but has gained over half half a foot from the low stage of 1895. The figures show that the lake levels are slowly but surely falling. The Chicago drainage canal is said to be partly responsible for the condition of lake levels, and an investigation of this may be made. Vessel men, especially those who operate large carriers are becoming somewhat alarmed.

One of the most notable business changes in the history of Charlevoix occurred Tuesday, when B. W. Miller, of the firm of Carpenter and Miller, bought out the interest of Mr. Carpenter, the founder of the business. B. W. Miller, who will be the sole proprietor of the business, is a Charlevoix boy having lived here since childhood. It is not generally known in the day and generation that Mr. Miller is a printer. He entered the Sentinel office in 1869, serving nearly four years. As a partner of his father-in-law, Mr. Carpenter, he has been actively engaged in the mercantile enterprise of that firm for many years, and perhaps no man in Charlevoix has a wider acquaintance in the region tributary to Charlevoix than he. He has in these years built up a reputation for business integrity that is worth more than money. The Sentinel extends hearty congratulations—to the printer who worked the old hand press a third of a century ago, to its staunch old friend Carpenter—that whom a more manly man never lived nor a truer friend ever looked you in the eye. Mr. Carpenter will enjoy the balance of his days, which we sincerely hope will be many and happy.

The class periods are taken up with exercises, games and drills. The senior high girls have been playing soccer, but with the advent of cold weather the girls shins have had time to recover and volley ball is the promising game at present.

The Junior girls are preparing for a volley ball tournament. In addition to these class activities we expect to have some very able girls' basketball teams this year.

Bertie Largest Insect?

In many respects Bertie the moth fiendus aptitudus, with a spread of 11 inches, is the largest insect known today. If size is to be gauged by bulk combined with body length, the battle Macrosomitis centrosoma, which ranges up to 6 inches in length, is perhaps the largest known.

COMFORT for COLICKY BABIES

...THROUGH CASTORIA'S GENTLE REGULATION

The best way to prevent colic, doctors say, is to avoid gas in stomach and bowels by keeping the entire alimentary tract open, free from waste. But remember this: a tiny baby's tender little organs cannot stand strong treatment. They must be gently urged. This is just the time Castoria can help most. Castoria, you know, is made entirely for babies and children. It is a pure vegetable preparation, perfectly harmless. It contains no harsh drugs, no narcotics. For years it has helped mothers through trying times with colicky little prepossessors suffering with digestive upsets, colds and fever. Keep genuine Castoria on hand, with the name:

COMMON head colds often "settle" in throat and chest where they may become dangerous. Don't take a chance! At the first sniffle, rub on Children's Musterole—and keep it on for five hours! Musterole is just good old Mother's Mustard treatment in modern form. Made with pure edible mustard oils and camphor, it's gentle but thorough. Clears clogged nose, relieves soreness, tightness, coughing. Does not blister like old-fashioned mustard plaster. Keep it handy for all the family. Three strengths: Regular, Children's (mild), Infants' (very mild).

ACID STOMACH

EXCESS acid is the common cause of indigestion. It results in pain and sourness about two hours after eating. The quick, correct relief is to take that which neutralizes acids—Phillips Milk of Magnesia. Think of Phillips' Milk of Magnesia. It has remained standard with physicians in the 50 years since its invention.

One spoonful of Phillips' Milk of Magnesia neutralizes instantly many times its volume of acid. Harmless, and tasteless, and yet its action is quick. You will never rely on crude methods, once you have tried quickly the method that gets. Be sure to get the genuine.

THE STORY

At nightfall, in the old city of New Orleans in the year 1821, Lucien Gaulin, convicted murderer, is released from prison on parole, pledged by the appearance of three figures, in ancient Spanish costume, two men and a woman, whose beauty enchants him. Investigating the appearance of the elder of the two men stands Sefior Aragon, with him Lucien's wife, Adolfe de Fuentes, supposed to be in Adolfe de Fuentes, supposed to be in Spanish grant in Venezuela. Gaulin de Soto finds escape and refuge in a garden, where he overhears a plot to overthrow Spanish rule in Venezuela. He, believed his father, is supposed assassinated Governor Jackson. Gaulin de Soto finds escape and refuge in the Mexican Embassy, where he is given a commission as secret agent and ambassador to the Vice-Spanish colony Bolivar.

"We go to La Guaira," said Francisco, addressing their own people from the waist. But remember this: a tiny baby's tender little organs cannot stand strong treatment. They must be gently urged. This is just the time Castoria can help most. Castoria, you know, is made entirely for babies and children. It is a pure vegetable preparation, perfectly harmless. It contains no harsh drugs, no narcotics. For years it has helped mothers through trying times with colicky little prepossessors suffering with digestive upsets, colds and fever. Keep genuine Castoria on hand, with the name:

"I think, of the two of us, Francisco, the charge of madness should not be laid against me."

The days went by, slowly enough, while the Santa Lucrezia plowed the quiet waters of the gulf, and my head healed, and the face of Santini became less like that of a gargoyle.

We touched at Vera Cruz, where a courier I had written to my father and mother was posted, a letter telling them that I had gone to Venezuela with friends, and would return to New Orleans at a later date. This, I knew, would relieve their sorrow over my non-arrival from France.

At Curiacoulon, in the tranquil harbor of which we spent a night, the wily Francisco offered me a chance to escape, but, having experienced a change of heart, I refused to take advantage of it, for I had heard a voice in the night—a voice as clear and as pure as the note of a smoking bird. It brought back to me remembrance of all the sad things of days with New Orleans night. That voice had thus method gets. Be sure to get the genuine.

Use it and dentifrice for clean teeth and healthy gums in Phillips' Dental Magnesia, a superior toothpaste that safeguards against acids.

"Francisco and Santini were one. I tried the door and found, to my great surprise, that it was unsecured, for they had been in the habit of locking me in. I stepped out, my heart thumping in my throat, and making the protecting shadow of the stairwell, crouched, listening, looking.

Scarce thirty feet away she stood beside the starboard afterrail, a gothamite mantilla over her hair and across her slim shoulders. Her face was raised toward the stars and she spoke that same from her lips was such as I had always imagined the angels might produce.

"Why do you sing in French, Caricquez, is not the Spanish language more romantic?"

"No one language, Isolfo, is sufficient for a night like this. Every language has its own true songs never more than sometimes quite suffice."

I found myself laughing softly in the gloom. She would sing a love song in French and the Spanish lover? Even Pollio was laughing now. "Adolfe, you would go to Paris!" he chided. "Never can she there see sing in King Lak, which means being in her place the accommodations of this tall Amerl with the fair hair and the clever wife."

Adolfe, the evil scoundrel in his heart, and I knew it, even so calm her voice was greatly chilling. Then, he has said, he will not go to Paris, and we should be glad to him during this, his first leap on the deck. I think the Americano must have had a touch of the Moon, which does funny things to us. I suppose he is laughing somewhere over the mast now at that joke.

"Unless," said Don Fuentes lamely, "there have been other sights."

Now I wanted to deny that; I wanted to tell her that her image had filled my dreams. I had a wild desire to cast myself at her feet and to cry my love aloud to the world, yet I knew that such an act of insanity would only add confirmation to Francisco's charge of madness against me.

While I waited, her aloof cold returned, breathing a new sweet and thrilling fragrance to me. I was afraid to raise my eyes until I heard her voice—until there has never been another face so desirable, nor a form so graciously feminine.

"Sefiora," I said, "ah, Sefiorita, you have come, then to my poor prison."

She turned her head and glanced over her shoulder, where in the gloom of the channel, dim outlines of the Spanish coast were visible. "Monsieur, you know the French?"

"Perfectly," I said; "it is my mother tongue."

"Your mother tongue? I thought you were Americaine."

"Yes, though my mother is French." Somehow close to me she raised her face toward the glow of the tiny pennants. "Will you tell me, Monsieur, who you are?"

"Tell her? I would tell her anything, anything to hold her here to give me further time to fill my eyes with her loveliness and my soul with the joy of her presence. "My name is Lorien."

"Lorien," she repeated, accenting as she should have done—the last syllable. "Lorien—what?"

Lorien Gaulin, the good Native name that my father, a youth just out of his teens, adopted in New Orleans after his escapade under the brilliant Lieutenant Greene. With faith in himself and the new nation to which he had offered valiant service, he had mastered by hard work and careful saving and investments to gather what was left of Monsieur Gaulin's valley lands."

If your father is wealthy, then why—oh, name of all the saints, Monsieur—still you thus throw away your life by serving this arch-fiend and conspirator, Simon Bolivar?"

Now a bit of Francisco's patrician nonchalant me, so that I refrained, for the moment from telling her that I had spurned the offer of the revolutionists. "The rebel of today, Your Majesty, may be tomorrow's liberator. Do you not know that, already, they are calling this Bolivar the Washington of South America?"

Water Held in Fallen Leaves Stops Erosion

The blanket of leaves from one year's leaf fall in the forest may weigh more than a ton an acre, says the United States Department of Agriculture. Federal forest service investigators find that a heavy litter is capable of holding vast amounts of water and slowing up the runoff which without the protecting blanket would quickly erode the soil.

In studying the protective value of leaf litter and the result of its removal by fire or other agency, investigators found that the little fall of dry leaves, gathered so, on a half acre of ground, forest at the Hemt Creek experimental forest near Asheville, N. C., weighed 1,364 pounds, even dry weight. Accumulated dry leaves and litter on the tract previous to the first clean-up weighed five and one-half tons to the acre, dry weight. From two to three years are required for decomposition of the litter, and a heavy blanket of leaves is thus normally present on the area. As a consequence of removal of the ground cover for this study, erosion set in on the area, although the rainfall was unusually slight.

Just Biding His Time

The taxi driver making my change saw me staring rather hardily took back a coin which he started to give me as a tip. "That's a pity," said he: "some kind of a Dutch nickel that I've stuck with." I looked at it, saw it was a half rubbed and gave it back. "Saving them?" I inquired.

"Not for long," he said ominously. "I got that from a good, churchgoing Christian a few minutes ago. I carried him to church, and that's what he worked off on me, the stiff. A tweed Christian he is, handing that to a poor taxi driver when he might just as well dropped it in the collection plate and done no one no harm."—Baltimore Sun.

Neal's Mother Has Right Idea

Within a few months there will be no more feverish, blotchy, headachy, constipated, pale and puny children. That prophecy would surely come true if every mother could vow for herself how quickly, easily, and harmlessly the bowels of babies and children are cleansed, regulated, given tone and strength by a product which has proved its merit and reliability to do what is claimed for it to millions of mothers in over fifty years of steadily increasing use.

As mothers find out from using it how children respond to the gentle influence of California Fig Syrup by growing stronger, sturdier and more active daily they simply have to tell other mothers about it. That's one of the reasons for its overwhelming sales of over four million bottles a year.

A Western mother, Mrs. Neal M. Todd, 1701 West 77th St., Oklahoma City, Okla., says: "When my son Neal, was three years old he began having constipation. I doctored to give him California Fig Syrup and in a few days he was all right and looked fine again. This pleased me so much that I have used Fig Syrup ever since. It is all he needs or little upset spells. It always stops his trouble quick, strengthens him, makes him eat."

Always ask for California Fig Syrup by the full name and see that the carton bears the word "California." Then you'll get the genuine.

Model's Clothes Stolen

A wax model in a lobby showcase in Washington, D. C., attracted more than usual attention when passersby began to notice she was clad only in underwear. They were notified by the night watchman and learned that a thief had stripped the model after breaking the catch in the glass door to her showcase. A coat and dress, as well as several silver garments were missing.

TELLS OF ORIGIN OF ENGLISH NAMES

Many Simply Indication of Residence.

"John ate children" is found written in an old parish register in a church in the English county of Huntingdonshire. Following it is "Richard ate Forty"; and a bit further on "Thomas ate Hell." The first two entries might suggest cannibalism. But a British museum expert whose specialty is the origin of English names explains that John and Richard were probably quite busy people indeed. In olden days in England, he says, "ate" meant simply "at" or "of." Spelling was apt to vary with each parish clerk and much confusion crept in. Thus "John ate children" signified simply "John of Chilcote." Richard ate Forte" stood for "Richard at, or of Forte." To find him you asked for Richard at the fort. And "Thomas ate Hell" referred to "Thomas at the hill."

The foundations are presumably much older than our surnames," the expert continued. "Many common ones are little and much used words. Dependent male servants, for any name meant people in an of final kind that was appointed to perform to indicate John by his place of residence or job. John the son of Rich and so very often as what the son's of his second name's, even as Jack the north distinguished on his cards, from which comes the contempt of all those John Smith."

"In medieval and Tudor England," he added, "one was often known by his trade only, accordingly the ancestor of yourself a large family is naturally also a dealer. For this reason many a father gave his own forename to that of his offspring, hoping that thereby it might survives to be current as to one or the other."

"A great number of the peculiar names borne in England today have their origin in nicknames derived from personal idiosyncrasy in some remote ancestor. And around others grew such unpleasant associations that a change was sought. It was for instance a certain Mr. Bung who became the first Norfolk Howard."

In the Puritan days in England many of the more fanatical people assumed religious texts and mottoes as Christian names, and those names were stinched to their surnames. The classic example of this kind of name is Prise-God Barebones.—New York Times.

Atoms Take Journeys

Atoms, even the heavy atoms of lead, are wanderers, Prof. J. G. van Heevay of the University of Freiburg in Breisgau, Germany, has been announcing their properties. Lead atoms are constantly in motion, even in solid metal, he believes. In a alloy of lead and gold, as a example, the gold atoms so finely the tiny particles of the alloy wander through a piece of a considerable, a piece of a considerable, a piece of a considerable,

Northern District Y. M. C. A. Committee Meets At Gaylord

The Northern District Y. M. C. A. committee met at the Otsego Hotel, Gaylord on October 27th to make plans for the future in the town of Northern Michigan. A. has agreed to loan an experienced secretary to continue the present work with the Hi-Y groups and the district meetings and conferences. The work of Mr. Gospill was commended highly by the representatives of the various towns. A plan of membership is to be worked out to give the work greater definiteness.

BAPTIST CHURCH SPECIAL MEETINGS WELL ATTENDED

The special meetings now being conducted in the First Baptist Church by the Rev. James E. Harrison of the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago, are largely attended. The balcony is being used, also chairs on the main floor in addition to the church pews, in order to accommodate the attendance. The average testimony will be equal to the meeting, "They are becoming more interesting each evening."

Mr. Harrison's new and unique method of gospel presentation has proven itself not only acceptable, but also very effective, as hundreds of souls have acknowledged their acceptance of the Lord Jesus Christ as their personal Saviour, others, who were previously Christians, have not been sparing in their acknowledgment of blessing. One individual has said, "Each message is a feast."

Music is a special feature of the meeting each evening and is greatly enjoyed by all. Various musical forms have been and are to be employed in the evening services. Mr. Harrison plays a special piano solo, sometimes an old and familiar hymn with variations of his own arrangement and again, a gospel song evangelistically. His pianologue, "David and Goliath," is something quite out of the ordinary.

The nightly Bible contests have been engaging the attention and interest of all. The winners are to be awarded at the closing evening meeting, Sunday, November 15. Of special interest will be the Bible picture contest. The pictures drawn by Mr. Harrison as illustrations of his messages, taken home and colored by the boys and girls from the 1st to the sixth grades, will be hung in the church auditorium Friday evening and the congregation will vote as to which one possesses the most representative coloring for the subject portrayed. The winner will also be awarded Sunday evening.

The meetings are to be conducted every night this week at 7:30 o'clock except Saturday, and are to conclude Sunday evening, November 18.

Fall Musical

A program of great interest will be given by the music department of the school on Friday evening, November 20, at the gymnasium. Mildred Atkinson Bush, reader, and dances from the Physical Education Department will assist. The admission is 10 cents and 25 cents, the proceeds to be used for new music.

Superintendent Attends Conference

Last week Superintendent Bush attended a conference at Lansing. About 15 or 20 superintendents from various cities were present and about 20 business men to represent the interests of the General Motor Co. Ex Governor Green and Governor Brucker attended the conference. Schafer Pearce, state superintendent and Ira Edmonson, dean of School of Education of University of Michigan were there. Mr. Pearce presided and Mr. Bush was named secretary of the group.

The purpose of the meeting was to discuss the advisability of teaching investments and personal budgeting in high school. A committee was appointed to continue the study.

This week C. B. S. will be entertained by two speakers. Dr. Armstrong will speak on Mental Hygiene. Miss Lera Curtis from the State Department of Education comes to speak to the county normal and also to the high school.

The commercial department is busy working on a bulletin for the Parent Teacher Association.

Last Friday night the students held a dance at the gymnasium. No admission was charged and the music was donated by various members. Every one had a delightful time and hope that we may have similar affairs in the future.

The meeting of the Top of Michigan Class C. Conference will be held at Petoskey next Saturday.

Preparations are being made to send some of the boys to the Older Boys Y. M. C. A. Conference at Ann Arbor.

On November 24 a football banquet will be held at, Boyne City to which the Charlevoix team and men have been invited.

The Glee Clubs

The members of three of the churches of Charlevoix were delighted Sunday with the vocal selections rendered by the school glee clubs. Sunday morning the girls' glee club sang at the Congregational Church, and at the same time the boys' glee club sang at the Baptist Church. Both glee clubs sang at the Methodist Church Sunday afternoon, and Marjorie Tyler played a flute solo, with Marjory Jean Carey as her pianist.

The boys' glee club will sing at the Parent Teachers Association meeting Wednesday evening.

Physical Training

The sixth grade boys were the victors in the "German hat ball" tournament which took place among the boys of the elementary grade school last week.

The fifth grade boys and girls have become wild and furious. They have learned an Indian war dance and we sincerely hope that they won't go on the war path, and scalp us all.

The Junior High girls are now preparing for the girls volley ball tournament.

Scholastic Activities Renewed

C. B. S. is very happy to be once more back to the usual schedule. Scholastic activities have been renewed since about 65 of the students donated money to pay for the damage done through the stocking of school books. This money was voluntarily taken by the students.

Program

Monday morning Mr. Coleman's English classes conducted a program for the high school. Mary Margaret Orlowski gave "The Social Conditions of England about 400 years ago." Two poems were given: "The Belle of the Ball Room" by Bernard Foster and "The Song of the Shirt" by Winfield Kirby. The program was

INTEREST SHOWN IN P. T. A. MEETING

Boys' Glee Club Gives Recital; Dr. Dean Gives Highlights of Welfare Conference

Members of the local P. T. A. Association met for the regular monthly meeting in the High School Assembly Room last evening.

From the number present and the interest shown the speakers of the evening it is evident that a great deal of thought is being given to the purpose and ideals of this organization.

The Boys' Glee Club under the direction of Mr. Rider, gave a brief recital which was thoroughly enjoyed by the entire audience.

Dr. McMillan presented a questionaire to these present to enable the program committee to best serve the interest of the members. His remarks concerning this matter were very well taken.

Dr. Dean gave a few of the highlights of the recent convention in Lansing and what the state is doing for the welfare of the children.

After adjournment of the business meeting an opportunity was given for all to enjoy refreshments in the form of frieslakes and coffee.

A PLEASANT SURPRISE PARTY

LETTER RECEIVED BY CO. COMMISSIONERS

State Administrative Board Has Authorized Projects For Immediate Work

The Board of Road Commissioners of Charlevoix County received the following statement from the State Highway Commissioner:

"During the past week you no doubt have noticed through the press that the State Highway Department will put on an extensive winter construction program, this being occasioned by the excessive amount of unemployment. I am sure you will be interested in knowing just what we plan on doing in your county. The following projects have just been authorized by the State Administrative Board and it is possible that others will follow in a short time.

Bittermeets

US-31—Charlevoix south—concrete—1.8 mile.

M-75—Boyne Falls to Boyne City —under grade—5.0 miles.

The projects which are authorized as "Betterments" will be handled at least in most cases through the organizations now maintaining state trunk line highways."

The county will finance the work and the money will be returned by the state May 1st, 1932. The necessary equipment is to be rental free to the State money to be applied to labor, hand and team work.

Committees have been appointed by the Chairman of the Board of Supervisors to register the names of the unemployed, and each committee will determine those most in need of work, who will be given the first week of employment supplemented by a new crop of twenty-five workmen each week, decided upon by the County Road Superintendent Davis, to whom the list will be turned over.

F. H. Wangeman, Chairman of the Board received word Friday morning from the State Highway Department at Cadillac, to go ahead with the work on M-75 as soon as possible. The job is to trunk line work consequently put into operation Monday, the force

Whose Turn Is It Now?

It was not, neither has it been our desire to bring the hospital into disrepute. But rather to have the public see the institution as it actually was and then let the same public see that its conditions were improved and placed upon its proper plane. If our action—that of bringing the subject to public attention—has produced good results we are amply repaid for so doing and feel that our effort has proven beneficial.

The recent brain storm, if it is worthy that name, was idiotic and carried with it only elements of imbecility, making for a fair sample of Mr. Usher's capacity for reasoning when he gets off on the wrong foot, or his tail over the reins, which, by the way is a frequent happening.

That something was radically wrong at the hospital is evidenced by the fact that some several of the recommendations or orders made by the state department of health have been complied with. We knew that such would be the case.

No, Mr. Adams did not speak out of turn. More, he will not speak out of turn and we will add that Mr. Adams could have gone much further into hospital affairs and by so doing confined himself wholly to the truth. There are many things about the hospital in the recent past that do not reflect credit on its management and the manner in which it has been conducted.

This is not only the opinion of Mr. Adams, but the opinion of others based on personal knowledge as patients at that institution, who from experience say "never again the Charlevoix hospital" for them—nor do they hesitate when they make such statement.

There is much in recent past history of the hospital that was not commendatory, much that was open to criticism, much that was objectionable. These conditions are now being overcome through the activities of the state health department—not, you will observe, by the voluntary action of the management.

Mr. Usher finds himself in a mess. Let him wriggle and twist as he may, there is only one way out. That is by telling the truth. Will he do so? Will he admit his error? Will he come clean? Or will he continue his evasive tactics and contemptible influendo practices?

Something like nine years since Mr. Adams severed his connection—NOT BY BEING ASKED TO RESIGN—with the Charlevoix hospital, at which time Mr. Adams turned over for his successor as treasurer, the sum of $1,511.67, the balance in his hands at the time due the hospital and the amount turned over was the exact amount on deposit in the Charlevoix banks, the exact amount in the treasurer's account, while the checks were drawn by Henry Partridge, who made the final report for Mr. Adams, the then treasurer. Mr. Partridge having made a complete check of the treasurer's accounts that extended through his term, during which he handled many thousands of dollars.

We still leave the putrid work to Mr. Usher. If he likes to role in his offin cum we are willing to let him enjoy the role.

UNUSUAL SERVICE ENJOYED SUNDAY

Speaker Returns and Presents Solution

We cannot overlook the opportunity to speak of the exceptional service held last Sunday in the Congregational Church. Miss Atkinson at and the Girls' Glee Club were splendid. Mr. Gerald F. Bush, the speaker of the morning, aroused much interest with his address with the compelling subject, "Handcuffing on the Western Wall."

In his opening remarks Mr. Bush outlined the sources of Western Civilization and made clear the countless peoples and eras to which we are indebted for many of our institutions, our customs, our language, our form of government and the like. His next point was the complexity of modern life and an illustration of the fact that we are more nearly the slaves of our mechanical inventions than we are the masters of our ways of living.

Then assuming that the values in our Western Civilization are in question he placed the Western World on trial and called on a number of experts to give testimony on the probable future of Western Civilization. In succession he outlined the opinion of the biologist, psychologist, business leader, economist, sociologist, sociologist, historian and mathematician. In each field evidence was presented to show that Western Civilization must in time succumb to those influences which it has itself built up. The biologist foretells the doom of civilization on the score of the tendency toward structural overloading, biological regression and racial revolt. The business leader sees business becoming so large and unwieldy as to no longer be manageable or serviceable. The psychologist sees the stress and strain of the twentieth century weakening the nervous system and conditioning collapse. The sociologist visions an age of inertia to follow the present dominion of man. And the historian draws a lesson from the fate of other civilizations that must in time result in decline of this one.

It was Mr. Bush's contention that all of this presents a tremendous challenge to both church and school. He intimated another side to the picture but left the audience to think that part out for itself and to accept the importance of both church and school in handling then strongest efforts toward checking the forces of decline and decay.

But Mr. Bush in leaving to the audience so great a task did not reckon with his listeners. There is being made a demand that Mr. Bush come back and finish the discussion in the near future. It was the lack of time that made it necessary for Mr. Bush to close his remarks just as he was about to solve the gloomy problem he had suggested.

FRIDAY AND SATURDAY ARE RED CROSS DAYS

Local Organization Has Established Headquarters at "The Exchange"

Friday and Saturday of this week, has been set aside for the local Red Cross Days, with headquarters at "The Exchange" on Bridge Street, where those who are able to do so can join this organization that has served this country so faithfully for half a century.

Turning back the pages of time 50 years we find Miss Clara Barton, called the "Angel of the Battlefield," after working in the Civil war and the Franco-Prussian war, attending the meetings of the International Red Cross in Geneva in 1869. Returning home she did her utmost to secure the adherence of the United States to the Red Cross Treaty. Disappointment met her efforts.

At Dansville, N. Y., the home of Clara Barton, in August, 1881, was organized the Clara Barton Chapter No. 1 of the American Red Cross. The principal purpose of the organization was to show what our Red Cross unit could do in time of need.

Huricane and ice put long to wait, a vast forest fire in Michigan took toll at hundreds of lives and rendered thousands homeless. Clothing, bedding and other supplies were shipped to Port Huron, also a liberal cash subscription. Grateful Michigan representatives in Congress used their influence on President Arthur and others at Washington. A message came announcing that the accession of the United States to the Treaty of Geneva, was ratified by the Senate, March 16, 1882. This treaty provided, among other things, for the neutrality of all persons in attendance upon the sick and wounded in hospitals and on battlefields.

Drought—America's greatest disaster—brought under Red Cross care 611,000 families in 23 states upward of 2,750,000 persons. Distribution of 608,000 packages of garden seed helped in rehabilitation.

We are called to put over another drive for membership which will extend up to Thanksgiving Day. The local work will be conducted on the same lines as last year. There will be no house to house canvas, but we will have headquarters at The Exchange, Mrs. James Simmons having offered room in her place of business.

The Legion Auxiliary has distributed posters and will assist at both quarters. Miss French will again have charge of the Junior Red Cross in the schools, with fine cooperation of the other teachers. Mrs. Lee Allard will have the work in the Parochial schools.

Adam Beeman, Rob Call, chairman.

BIG CROWD ATTENDS MEETING SUNDAY

Several Speakers Heard At M. E. Church on Educational Program

The School-Church Daily, in the interest of the observance of Educational Week, held last Sunday afternoon at the local Methodist Church was largely attended.

The school authorities had cooperated with the church in preparing and arranging the programme. All of the music was in the hands of the High School, and was of a high order, and very much enjoyed. The Girls' Glee Club was directed by Miss Atkinson and the Boys' Glee Club by Mr. Rider, while Miss Tyler gave a very fine flute solo, accompanied by Miss Carey.

Mrs. Hiller represented the Board of Education, and spoke briefly on "Schools and High Ideals of Home Life." She showed the large place of the home in the development of character, and showed how the schools, in these modern days, are trying to co-operate with parents, in securing better influences, more regular habits, more through discipline in the home, as fundamental to anything the school can accomplish.

Mr. Bingham represented the faculty, and spoke on the topic "School and Development of Character." He showed how both mental and spiritual results are achieved through science, literature, and history, as taught in our schools, and even through the rules and ideals maintained in clean athletics.

Rev. W. W. Byrd had announced his topic to be: "Filling the Saw", and drew an illustration from a saw that had poor steel in it, but was very well set, and filed, and a knife of the best material, but not sharpened. That the saw did pretty good work, while the knife would not cut at all. That the sharpening and setting of the saw was comparable to the careful training and development of our young people in the schools, and could make much more efficient, by this training, those with even rather poor native ability. He carried the illustration further in the matter of actually putting "temper" into the steel, that our schools are actually improving the original quality of the material coming under their training. He paid high tribute to the work of our teachers, and bespoke for them more co-operation and support from the general public.

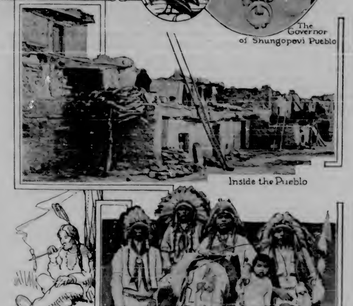
THANKSGIVING—
An Old Indian Custom

Indian Dance at Taos during Thanksgiving Festival



The Governor of Shungopovi Pueblo

Inside the Pueblo

By EDITHA L. WATSON

Since the edge of his little cornfield, the Hunt farmer looks at the crop and thinks. His lips move, and gentle words come from them—words which carry a message of heartfelt praise that we might guess their meaning from the warmth with which they are uttered, and hence, because man is not spoken audibly, as words are, we surmise that they were addressed to Those Above whom we call the almighty.

"Thanks, thanks," and in those words he expresses one of the most characteristics of the human creature, that of giving thanks on every occasion and no matter how slight the provocation.

We may smile at the thought of offering thanks for the presence of a visitor; than his health is good; if a child who has fallen and hurt itself slightly, begin to smile again, if corn comes—there are words of thanks which fill every day. Yet we, who pride ourselves on the manners and who are quick to acknowledge the slightest favor from a fellow-human, rarely but admire the elegance with which rails for acknowledgment to God also—and when we realize that in those seemingly slight events are beyond the standard powers of man to bring about, we feel that we have been ungrateful in that we so rarely for granted without bothering to acknowledge the source.

No concern with seeming thankfulness, the Indians also said grace sometimes both before and after meals. To the words of the little prayer were added the gift of food, which was cast into the fire as the grace was spoken. Thereby all portion of the sacrificial meal with the Zuni as he performed the rite. Spirits, partake!" implored the Pueblo woman, and her husband echoed the whispered prayer and offering of gratitude.

In the Pueblo feast, an evening was undertaken as without an offering. A piece of meat pemmican, the bread and the water was a bit of each sort of food was almost to the fire, with a thought of thanksgiving for plan and figure before meals. The smallest children had their hands pointed in this little ceremony, for the spirit of gratitude to Those Above her every thing, and for food above all, was strong in every Indian heart. Nothing else could shine if necessary, smiles they could do without, but life itself expended and they were grateful for it.

It is strange that this nearly the grace before meals of white men and red coincide. Both are those likely to be found in the world, for the Indian by his offering of food as well, and both ask blessings to come. A Zuni grace runs as follows:

"Makers of the tracks of our lives and ye ancestral to us as food, who have set left, of the sacred assemblies of food with celebration. Indeed, Thanksgiving day consists around the dinner table. At first a feat day, the early American colonists gradually assimilated the old Indian customs and today the annual feast of gratitude is a real American institution. Hither to where at the more distant time most of the dishes which are traditional in the day would be those with the Indian themselves enjoined and celebrated by the eating.

First of all, there is that great American bird, the turkey. Nothing the bird was ever seen before, and the emigrants brought him to must be some relative to the peacock, as to structure is his iridescent finery. Perhaps there is nothing more delicious than a young wild turkey roasted on glowing coals, which the Indians of the Southwest know. With the noble bird always go potatoes, an American product which the natives refused long before the coming of Columbus. In fact, in those pre-discovery days America furnished some of the choicest and most palatable foods which we know of today. Some of them grow, also, in the eastern hemisphere, but many others distinctly of the western American.

The Indians had real cause for thanksgiving in the variety and tastiness of the food. True, there was no beef, but buffalo humus were a culinary which has been substituted in practically every history of early Americans, and this juicy meat, roasted over coals, would rival the famous cookery of the old world, yet requiring no other sauce than hunger.

But do not think that hunger was the necessary ingredient of an Indian meal. Cooking was not the hackneyed exercise we might believe it to have been. There were fifty-three ways of preparing corn, and we should offer thanks on our own accounts for this Indian food, as we do for wheat, because other grain dishes prepared long before our time, by the "savages" of America.

Suppose we see what else in the way of food, that the Indians handed on to us, we may be thankful for. Milk and butter were unknown, but oil and animal fats were easily procured, and the pemmican would have tried for them, too, since we read that the southeastern tribes built up a considerable trade in oil, oils which, neglect either. There is a little Cherokee tale which illustrates the customs of celebrating before feasting.

Seven wolves went out hunting and caught a fat grandhog. Their prey, considering that with presence of mind there might be a chance for absence of body, reminded them that people always danced for gratitude when they had something good to eat, giving the Green Corn dance as an example. So urged the wolves to do likewise, and offered to teach them steps and to play for them. The wolves, although good wise very hungry, eagerly agreed to hold the dance of thanksgiving, and during their celebration the grandhog escaped.

A Group of Santa Clara Pueblo Indians

The Green carry dance, in which the animal situated, is one of the favorites among Indian ceremonies of thanksgiving, although it is held at the time of green corn—late summer. Among the Creeks this festival was the occasion of forgiveness, and all wrongs were done forgotten. The ceremonies lasted from four to eight days and were marked by rejoicing over the real fruits of the year.

The Natchez also held a green corn festival, beautiful and ceremonial a sort of dance before the harvest. This later in the year about the time of our own Thanksgiving day, there are harvest festivals when the prayers of gratitude are addressed to Those Above, as the harvest people exchange with ceremony and rejoicing the gifts which the Earth Mother has bestowed. In our autumn Pueblo dance great trays full of the finest vegetables, bread and sweets were thrown about and trampled into the earth, forming a great offering to express the thanks of the people.

Although shorter and relishing are an integral to us as food, we have not left off the sacred assemblies of food with celebration. Indeed, Thanksgiving day consists around the dinner table. At first a feat day, the early American colonists gradually assimilated the old Indian customs and today the annual feast of gratitude is a real American institution. Hither to where at the more distant time most of the dishes which are traditional in the day would be those with the Indian themselves enjoined and celebrated by the eating.

Those who have lived in the Southwest know how delicious some thickened with ground squash seeds or cornmeal can be. The Pueblos of Louisiana are now celebrating their harvest of 1-yards assaultes to their soups, and they learned to do this from the Choctaw Indians.

Watermelon grows in the same region. Another salad ingredient, the avocado, was growing centuries ago in Central America and the West Indies and consequences some originally from Mexico and Central America. The Thanksgiving dinner table to this tune of green will offer evidence from the American tropical, and serve much warmer, possibly, than the cold rock, all cup Americans. There also be fish eaten, which some time, to their ancestors, unlimited on either banks or will rise, which grow in North America. Turnips, onions and parsnips once grew with and so did both sweet and white potatoes. Baked squash is an old Indian dish which has never ceased to be a good one. Of course tomatoes will be served, in one form or another, and those originated in Peru, so that these are predominantly American, even though not strictly Indian.

Maybe some family with a taste for old-fashioned things will pass to the old-fashioned turkey, and serve pokeweed and wood-sorrel greens with their will, of course, be corn bread to eat with the gravy. Anyone who is hunted to such a feast should give thanks double. And if there were a few fruit-pressed persimmon concoctions within reach, what could human appetite want more?

While we are hunting for Indian dishes to place on the Thanksgiving dinner table we may give thought to the appropriate beverage for this truly American meal. Of course, the average man will demand coffee, which is not a native drink, but note, which has a high caffeine content would be the nearest drink of the sort. Teas made from dried flowers or fragrant twigs and roots would be true Indian decoctions, but scarcely enjoyable in our refined palates. Tea wine, the Apache beer made of sprouted corn, would be appropriate, for it is classified as a non-alcoholic degree. The only real Indian beverage which appeals to modern tastes is chocolate, or frothy drink of the Aztecs.

After dinner, in that hour when it is too early for the football game and it is not yet too conveniently filled to rare about exertion anyway, the air begins to grow hazy with tobacco smoke. Here, too, is an old Indian custom literally

A NAVY FOR DEFENSE

In all the discussions regarding the size of naval budgets, one point is not to be lost sight of, and that is that Uncle Sam requires a navy which will protect him against any reasonable possible attack from any direction. For while there is a discussion of expenditures and size of ships, it is not to be forgotten that the pacifists themselves are busily at work trying to destroy the efficiency and usefulness of the navy by creating sentiment for a sweeping curtailment if not elimination of naval power. In these troublesome times the need for a good defensive navy is greater than ever. President Hoover summed up the situation in his Navy Day speech when he said:

"The first necessity of our government is the maintenance of a Navy as efficient and strong that, in conjunction with our Army, no enemy may ever invade our country. The commanding officers of our forces inform me that we are maintaining that strength and efficiency."

Ours is a force of defence, not offensive. To maintain less than strength is to destroy national safety; to maintain greater forces is not only economic injury to our people but a threat against our neighbors and would be rightwise cause for ill-will among them. Our problem is to assure the adjustment of our forces to the minimum based upon the outlook in the world; to strive for lower armament throughout the whole world; to promote good will among nations; to prevent military activities with rigid economy; to prevent extremists on one side from undermining the public will to support our necessary forces, and to prevent extremists on the other side from starving the public treasury.

"We are fortunate in having a Navy with long, high-spirited tradition. It possesses a personal of officers and men who have never been excelled in our whole history. The nation has reason for confidence in their ability."

It is undoubtedly true that the safe rule to follow, in the midst of so many differences of opinion, is to be amply prepared in fighting ships. This does not mean extravagant building but a wise and efficient building policy.

The day may be coming when the navy will be out of date but it is unsafe to assume that it has as yet reached that state. With an ample navy, a great air corps and the skeleton of an army that could be made efficient rapidly, we need not fear for our own safety. Preparedness in all lines of defense is the best guaranty of peace.

McADOO'S SUGGESTION

The latest Democrat of national reputation, and there have been several of them of late, to take a stand against the cancellation of the allied debts owing to the United States, is William G. McAdoo, who was the Secretary of the Treasury in President Wilson's cabinet, and who knows something about how the money was loaned to Europe.

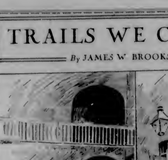
In a recently published book, "Crowded Years," Mr. McAdoo declares that the cancellation of the debts would place a heavy burden on the American taxpayer. He offers a suggestion, which has been made before, that Great Britain and France, who owe us the greatest sums, cede to us at least a part of their possessions in the Western Hemisphere as a payment on the debts. The former Secretary of the Treasury says in part:

"If they would transfer to us their West Indian possessions, together with British and French Guiana, we could afford to accept them in liquidation of a large part, perhaps as much as half, of their indebtedness. This is far more than the intrinsic value of the islands, and to the extent that it is, we would be cancelling a large part of the debt. But I am sure that public opinion in the United States would approve this generous treatment, especially if it was provided that a just part of the excess value at which we took the islands and other territorial possessions should be applied by Great Britain and France to a reduction of their claims against Germany.

The debt-cancellationists in the United States are having tough sledding. Practically all of the leading statesmen of both political parties are against cancellation. And it might be well to remember, as one authority recently pointed out that the debts would not be actually cancelled. They would merely be transferred from Europe to the backs of the American taxpayers. Somebody has to pay them, and it is certainly neither fair nor just to ask the American taxpayer to pay back to Uncle Sam money which was borrowed by European nations. The term war debts is misleading too, as practically all of the debt incurred before the armistice, has been cancelled. The international bankers want to make their private loans in Germany good, and this is only natural, but there ought to be some better method than shouldering the rest of the cost of the war on to the American taxpayers.

TRAILS WE CROSS

By JAMES W. BROOKS



AN EXECUTION WALL UNDER SPANISH RULE

There were tragic moments in the old Calaboso in New Orleans along with its pomp and ceremony. This place, for example was the end of the road for many a prisoner and it is still known as the Execution Wall.

KEEP TAXATION WOLF AWAY

The Lincoln, Nebraska, Star says editorially: "Senator Hitchcock returns from Europe with a familiar but nevertheless well-founded criticism of governments as they exist there. They are bleeding their people white. Mr. Hitchcock declares.

"The American taxpayer feels he has grievance . . . but if he were to review the economic conditions of Europe he would return to the United States with a feeling of gratitude and thankfulness in his heart. He hasn't even begun to feel the pinch of taxation to the extent of the peoples of the British Isles, Germany, France, and Belgium. In Britain, particularly, the attempts of the government to extricate itself from the mess in which it was plunged, has placed such a terrific burden upon business, and upon the individual, the struggle has become a life and death matter.

"Europe will find it necessary to secure relief from the tax load, and apparently the easiest avenue out is through reduction in cost of armaments. Although she is still bound by suspicion and fear the pressing needs of the hour made it the more certain there will be an entirely different attitude revealed when the nations meet again to consider possible steps of reducing the burden of preparing for war. The United States should be ready to offer every support and encouragement to such a step."

A BLESSING MENACED

In an address in which he compared American living conditions and industrial development with those of Russia, Edwin Gruhl, Vice-president and General Manager, the North American Company, said: "Because there is a huge network of transmission and distribution lines in the United States, those mechanical helpers which are electrically operated are available anywhere. It is not necessary to concentrate them, as in the Soviet plan, in grouped industrial centers with the necessity of living in communal housing institutions as Russia has proposed. It makes possible the living by our workers in scattered communities in their own garden homes as independent individuals.

"All this economy and efficiency is inevitably leading to the shorter working day and shorter working week. The four-hour day predicted by Steinmetz is possible. If, with it, a four-day week is sufficient to produce the manufactured necessities of life, there remains over nine-tenths of the time in which the American worker can be his own boss unless paternal government, such as Russia's, insists on prescribing what he may do during his entire waking hours."

AN UNSOUND PLAN

It has been suggested that the motorist be made to pay the lion's share of a $25,000,000 unemployment relief fund in California, by raising the gasoline tax rate one cent, by levying a motor sales tax, by permitting counties to levy a motor tax, and by urging the Federal government to tax automobiles or gasoline or both.

It is to be feared that many otherwise steady persons will be led astray by the cause for which the proceeds would be used. Unemployment relief is a splendid thing, and a thing that is close to all of us. It is something that must be done. But to do it entirely or largely at the expense of motorists, as a class, would be as reprehensible as doing it at the expense of users of candy or electricity or airplanes or golf balls. This is a perfect example of the lengths to which officials have sought to go in "socking" the motorist's pocketbook.

A state relief fund should be made up, so far as possible, at the expense of every citizen and taxpayer. It should certainly not be made up by unfair and unjust legislation against a certain class of citizens. As the Baltimore Sun recently said, "Gas and motor-car taxes cannot be carried much further without showing diminishing returns, and if the rage for boosting them continues at the present rate the best thing that could happen would be a revolt which would compel cessation."

SOMETHING RADICALLY WRONG

Alexander Paterson, His Majesty's Commissioner of Prisons, in England, spent several months investigating prisons in this country some time ago. His remarks comparing penal conditions here and in his country are hardly flattering to us, but they are well worth listening to.

Mr. Paterson was especially impressed, and unfavorably, by the size of prisons here and the number of inmates. Overcrowding is the rule in American institutions, rather than the exception. Much of this he blamed, not on "crime waves" but on our multitude of laws and severity of sentences. He says that at one institution he watched the checking-in of twenty new prisoners, nineteen of whom, in England, would have been dealt with under the probation act or been fined.

Here is expert testimony in support of the fact that the United States, through its zeal in passing laws, is manufacturing criminals on a wholesale scale. And it is certainly not a coincidence that this has been accompanied by a break-down in the processes of justice, so far as crime prevention is concerned. When we send twenty men to a penitentiary, nineteen of whom would have been kept outside in England—one of the most law-abiding of countries—there is something radically wrong with the system. It needs quick attention.

It is estimated that between 5,000,000 and 6,000,000 people will visit the National Capital during the George Washington Bicentennial era beginning February 22, 1932, and running over a period of nine months.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

With the scattered elections of November 3 over the votes counted, the attention of those interested in American politics now naturally turns to the coming session of Congress, and the preparations, soon to be made, for the major campaign of 1932. The Democrats elected three out of five congressmen and so evenly matched is political strength in the House of Representatives that this would seem to give them the organization. If there are no further changes, and if preliminary figures prove to be correct, Jack Garner, veteran Texas congressman and friend of the late Nicholas Longworth, will be chosen as speaker of the house.

The situation is not entirely comfortable for the Democrats, however, in spite of their slender paper majority. Already there are reports of a division in the Democratic ranks, due to sectional demands, and perhaps, in a measure to old sectional prejudices. If the rule of seniority is followed, as is usually the case, the House will have not only a speaker from the southern state of Texas, but about thirty chairmen out of a possible forty-six, of the congressional committees, hailing from below the Mason and Dixon line. This is not entirely to the liking of the northern Democrats, and already there are to be heard charges of "Dixie domination" of Congress.

Just what the results will be, cannot be stated. It is known, however, that there is considerable friction between southern leadership of the Democratic party, and New York leadership, which centers around Tammny Hall. Now if the rule of strict seniority is to be followed and no concessions are given to the northern Democratic congressmen, it would be easy for a few Democrats to absent themselves from the session in which the house is organized, so throwing control back to the Republicans. Whether they would go so far remains to be seen, but it is now evident that while the Republican leaders in Congress have their troubles with western insurgents, the Democratic southern leaders are not immune from Tammany insurgents, when the margin in the House is close. Of course this is all presaged on the supposition that the Democrats will control the House. So narrow is the margin that almost anything might happen between now and the date on which the House is organized.

Governor Franklin Roosevelt won out on his forestry amendment to the New York constitution, in spite of the opposition of former Governor Smith and the politicians believe this has strengthened Roosevelt's chances for the Democratic presidential nomination in 1932. There is still plenty of opposition to the New York governor with Governor Ritchie, Newton Baker, and Jim Reed in the running to say nothing of an occasional crv from the dry Democrats for William G. McAdoo.

So far as the Republican situation is concerned there is little change. Officials of the National Committee say that there is no question about the renomination of President Hoover in the next Republican convention. They say that it will be without organized opposition. Thus far the only Republicans who have come out in the open in their urging for the nomination against Mr. Hoover have been Governor Pinchot of Pennsylvania, and former Senator France of Maryland. Friends of Senator Borah are said to have offered him support if he would agree to make the race but there is no evidence that he will do so. Of late there has been some revival in the newspapers of the gossip concerning Senator Hiram Johnson as a candidate but the California Senator, although he has vigorously criticized the administration's foreign policy, has said nothing about being a candidate for president.

BANCROFT HAS STELLAR ROLE IN NEW FILM

A Pictured Epic of Industry With An Ambition—Mad Man Piling Up Wealth

Why should "ambition" ride roughshod and sint golden castles on a distant horizon, when only romance and love will ever fill such domiciles with thoughtful friends and loving children?

In the picture drama "Rich Man's Folly" which appears at the theatre, from Saturday to Monday these pertinent questions are the theme of a story of intriguing interest. They are the basis of dramatic episodes that crowd the action of a marvelous picture drama George Bancroft has the stellar role of "Brock Trumbull," an ambitious, money-grabbing shipbuilder who stifles all his gentler qualities for money and a mad ambition.

This is just the kind of work in which Bancroft excels, character impersonation He lives the part. A hard-fisted, domineering man is born on the screen. Success follows success. Wealth piles up. But the tide turns. Friends desert and his family is estranged. Money dwindles and his new wife leaves. He faces failure. Then at last the folly of it all comes to him. He reaches out to his daughter, whom he never loved and always opposed, groping, longing for the love and happiness he had always spurned, but which he now realizes is the only thing that makes life worth while.

To fully interpret such a role requires experience, talent technique, Bancroft stretches himself and puts everything he has into the role.

The picture is filled with incidents; the clash and clang of a great shipbuilding plant with its thousands of workers. It is a great industrial epic in which photography as well as the players has an important role. In the cast there are many screen favorites whom picture fans always like to see.

MADGE EVANS BEAUTY LIKE VIENNA VENUS

Unwittingly the judges in a recent Viennese beauty contest influenced the casting of a feature picture in Hollywood.

The judges in Vienna were consciously searching for the perfect type of native beauty, which fitted in exactly with the needs of the casting office at Fox Studios where they were looking for a leading woman to costar with Charles Farrell in "Heartbreak," the romantic drama which plays at the Palace Theatre beginning Wednesday. The script called for her to represent the fairest of Austria's daughters, and to portray the role of a countess—an exacting requirement, even in Hollywood.

However, casting directors are well aware of the seriousness with which Viennese gentlemen select their beauties, so they waited patiently for the decision of the contest before choosing the heroine for the picture.

Finally, the Viennese committee, which included artists and sculptors, agreed that Maria Von Elsler was "the most perfect blonde in Vienna, or anywhere else on the European continent."

When this final decision and report was handed down, the powers that are in the Fox casting office, breathed a prayer of thanks because they had already practically decided upon Madge Evans as the most suitable actress to fill the coveted role. They were exceedingly grateful that their choice almost exactly coincided with the selection made by the serious-minded Viennese—admitted authorities on such matters.

Miss Evans like Fraulein Elsler has golden-blonde hair. She is one-half inch shorter and weighs two pounds less. This beauty who recently scored in "Guilty Hands" plays the leading feminine role in "Heartbreak," story of courage and love that could arouse tragedy and misunderstanding.

Farrell is said to excel even his performance in "Merely Mary Ann." Hardie Albright, Paul Cavanagh and John Arledge are the other featured players. Alfred Werker directed.

Messrs. George Holmes and Fred Horn, with their wives, who have been visiting at the homes of relatives in Marion township for two weeks, returned to their homes in Detroit Monday morning.

WOOD WISDOM
If you buy home materials at home and there is anything wrong, you can get hold of the merchant at once and get things adjusted. Not so easy if you are dealing with a stranger at a distance. Worth thinking about, that the fellow who has had trouble.

If you know you are right and admit you are wrong—you are married.

Yes, you have heard about the fellow who fit a match to see if his tank was empty and found it wasn't, also the fellow who raced to the crossing to beat the train, but didn't. Did you hear of your neighbor who bought a new coat from a smooth stranger from the big city, thinking it was better than Mule-Hide, and soon found to his grief that it wasn't? It takes only a little investigation at home to make sure before investing, and it costs nothing to inquire.

A customer demands the best from his local dealer and gets it; has it charged for six months or so, and if there is a change, gets an adjustment. That is where he can get all of that is the best place to trade.

Though Mule-Hide roofing is beautiful in its range of colors, the greatest beauty about it is its dependability. Every bit of it carries a double guarantee. Better let us explain to you what that means. It won't cost you a cent to hear about it.

Two Scotchmen had a bet to be played by the one who caught the first fish, and one went to fishing without bait, while the other would not pull in his line when he had a bite.

A NAVY FOR DEFENSE

In all the discussions regarding the size of naval budgets, one point is not to be lost sight of, and that is that Uncle Sam requires a navy which will protect him against any reasonable possible attack from any direction. For while there is a diminution of expenditures and size of ships, it is not to be forgotten that the pacifists themselves are busily at work trying to destroy the efficiency and usefulness of the navy by creating sentiment for a scrapping parliament if not elimination of naval power. In these troublesome times the need for a good defensive navy is greater than ever. President Hoover summed up the situation in his Navy Day speech when he said:

"The first necessity of our government is the maintenance of a Navy as efficient and strong that, in conjunction with our Army, no enemy may ever invade our country. The commanding officers of our forces inform me that we are maintaining that strength and efficiency.

"Ours is a force of defense, not offensive. To maintain at least that strength will not destroy national safety, to maintain greater forces is not only economic injury to our people but a threat against our neighbors and would be righteous cause for ill-will among them. Our problem is to assure the adjustment of our forces to the minimum based upon the outlook in the world, to strive for lower armament throughout the whole world; to promote good will among nations, to conduct our military activities with rigid economy; to prevent extremists on one side from undermining the public will to support our necessary forces, and to prevent extremists on the other side from waste of public funds.

"We are fortunate in having a Navy with long, high-spirited tradition. It possesses a personal of officers and men who have never been excelled in our whole history. The nation has reason for confidence in their ability."

It is undoubtedly true that the safe rule to follow, in the midst of so many differences of opinion, is to be amply prepared in fighting ships. This does not mean extravagant building but a wise and efficient building policy.

The day may be coming when the navy will be out of date but it is unsafe to assume that it has as yet reached that state. With an ample navy, a great air corps and the skeleton of an army that could be made sufficient rapidly, we need not fear for our own safety. Preparedness in all lines of defense is the best guaranty of peace.

McADOO'S SUGGESTION

The latest Democrat of national reputation, and there have been several of them of late, to take a stand against the cancellation of the allied debts owing to the United States, is William G. McAdoo, who was the Secretary of the Treasury in President Wilson's cabinet, and who knows something about how the money was loaned to Europe.

In a recently published book, "Crowded Years," Mr. McAdoo declares that the cancellation of the debts would place a heavy burden on the American taxpayer. He offers a suggestion, which has been made before, that Great Britain and France, who owe us the greatest sums, cede to us at least a part of their possessions in the Western Hemisphere as a payment on the debts. The former Secretary of the Treasury says in part:

"If they would transfer to us their West Indian possessions, together with British and French Guiana, we could afford to accept them in liquidation of a large part, perhaps as much as half, of their indebtedness. This is far more than the intrinsic value of the islands, and to the extent that it is, we would be cancelling a large part of the debt. But I am sure that public opinion in the United States would approve this generous treatment, especially if it was provided that a just part of the excess value ne which we took the islands and other territorial possessions should be applied by Great Britain and France to a reduction of their claims against Germany.

The debt cancellationists in the United States are having tough sledding. Practically all of the leading statesmen of both political parties are against cancellation. And it might be well to remember, as one authority recently pointed out that the debts would not be actually cancelled. They would merely be transferred from Europe to the backs of the American taxpayers. Somebody has to pay them, and it is certainly neither fair nor just to ask the American taxpayer to pay back to Uncle Sam money which was borrowed by European nations. The term war debts is misleading too, as practically all of the debt incurred before the armistice has been cancelled. The international bankers want to make their private loans in Germany good, and this is only natural, but there ought to be some better method than shouldering the rest of the cost of the war on to the American taxpayers.

KEEP TAXATION WOLF AWAY

The Lincoln, Nebraska, Star says editorially: "Senator Hitchcock returns from Europe with a familiar but nevertheless well-founded criticism of governments as they exist there. They are bleeding their people white, Mr. Hitchcock declares.

"The American taxpayer feels he has grievance . . . but if he were to review the economic conditions of Europe he would return to the United States with a feeling of gratitude and thankfulness in his heart. He hasn't even begun to feel the pinch of taxation to the extent of the peoples of the British Isles, Germany, France, and Belgium. In Britain, particularly, the attempts of the government to extricate itself from the mess in which it was plunged, has placed such a terrific burden upon business, and upon the individual, the struggle has become a life and death matter.

"Europe will find it necessary to secure relief from the tax load, and apparently the easiest avenue out is through reduction in cost of armaments. Although she is still bound by sinews and fear the pressing needs of the hour made it the more certain there will be an entirely different attitude revealed when the nations meet again to consider possible steps of reducing the burden of preparing for war. The United States should be ready to offer every support and encouragement to such a step."

A BLESSING MENACED

In an address in which he compared American living conditions and industrial development with those of Russia, Edwin Gruhl, Vice-president and General Manager, the North American Company, said: "Because there is a huge network of transmission and distribution lines in the United States, those mechanical helpers which are electrically operated are available anywhere. It is not necessary to confine them, as in the Soviet plan, in grouped industrial centers with the necessity of living in communal housing institutions as Russia has proposed. It makes possible the living by our workers in scattered communities in their own garden homes as independent individuals.

"All this economy and efficiency is inevitably leading to the shorter working day and shorter working week. The four-hour day predicted by Steinmetz is possible. If, with it, a four-day week is sufficient to produce the manufactured necessities of life, there remains over nine-tenths of the time in which the American workers can be his own boss unless paternal government, such as Russia's, insists on prescribing what he may do during his entire waking hours."

AN UNSOUND PLAN

It has been suggested that the motorist be made to pay the lion's share of a $25,000,000 unemployment relief fund in California, by raising the gasoline tax rate one cent, by levying a motor sales tax, by permitting counties to levy a motor tax, and by urging the Federal government to tax automobiles or gasoline or both.

It is to be feared that many otherwise steady persons will be led astray by the cause for which the money would be used. Unemployment relief is a good thing, and a thing that is close to all of us. It is something that must be done. But to do it entirely or largely at the expense of motorists, as a class, would be as reprehensible as doing it at the expense of users of candy or electricity or airplanes or golf balls. This is a perfect example of the lengths to which officials have sought to go in "sucking" the motorist's pocketbook.

A state relief fund should be made up, so far as possible, at the expense of every citizen and taxpayer. It should certainly not be made up by unfair and unjust legislation against a certain class of citizens. As the Baltimore Sun recently said, "Gas and motor-car taxes cannot be carried much further without showing diminishing returns, and if the rage for boosting them continues at the present rate the best thing that could happen would be a revolt which would compel cessation."

SOMETHING RADICALLY WRONG

Alexander Paterson, His Majesty's Commissioner of Prisons, in England, spent several months investigating prisons in this country some time ago. His remarks comparing penal conditions here and in his country are hardly flattering to us, but they are well worth listening to.

Mr. Paterson was especially impressed, and unfavorably, by the size of prisons here and the number of inmates. Overcrowding is the rule in American institutions, rather than the exception. Much of this he blamed, not on "crime waves" but on our multitude of laws and severity of sentences. He says that at one institution he watched the checking-in of twenty new prisoners, nineteen of whom, in England, would have been dealt with under the probation act or been fined.

Here is expert testimony in support of the fact that the United States, through its zeal in passing laws, is manufacturing criminals on a wholesale scale. And it is certainly not a coincidence that this has been accompanied by a breakdown in the processes of justice, so far as crime prevention is concerned. When we send twenty men to a penitentiary, nineteen of whom would have been kept outside in England—one of the most law-abiding of countries—there is something radically wrong with the system. It needs quick attention.

It is estimated that between 5,000,000 and 6,000,000 people will visit the National Capitol during the George Washington Bicentennial era beginning February 22, 1932, and running over a period of nine months.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

With the scattered elections of November 3 over the votes counted, the attention of those interested in American politics now naturally turns to the coming session of Congress, and the preparations, soon to be made, for the major campaign of 1932. The Democrats elected three out of five congressmen and so evenly matched is political strength in the House of Representatives that this would seem to give them the organization. If there are no further changes, and if preliminary figures prove to be correct, Jack Garner, veteran Texas congressman and friend of the late Nicholas Longworth, will be chosen as speaker of the house.

The situation is not entirely comfortable for the Democrats, however, in spite of their slender paper majority. Already there are reports of a division in the Democratic ranks, due to sectional demands, and perhaps, in a measure to old sectional prejudices. If the rule of seniority is followed, as is usually the case, the House will have not only a speaker from the southern state of Texas, but about thirty chairmen out of a possible forty-six, of the congressional committees, hailing from below the Mason and Dixon line. This is not entirely to the liking of the northern Democrats, and already there are to be heard charges of "Dixie domination" of Congress.

Just what the results will be, can not be stated. It is known, however, that there is considerable friction between southern leadership of the Democratic party, and New York leadership, which centers around Tammy Hall. Now if the rule of strict seniority is to be followed and no concessions are given to the northern Democratic congressmen, it would be easy for a few Democrats to absent themselves from the session in which the house is organized, so throwing control back to the Republicans. Whether they would go so far remains to be seen, but it is now evident that while the Republican leaders in Congress have their troubles with western insurgents, the Democratic southern leaders are not immune from Tammany insurgents, when the margin in the House is close. Of course this is all presaged on the supposition that the Democrats will control the House. So narrow is the margin that almost anything might happen between now and the date on which the House is organized.

Governor Franklin Roosevelt won out on his forestry amendment to the New York constitution, in spite of he opposition of former Governor Smith and the politicians believe his has strengthened Roosevelt's hances for the Democratic presidential nomination in 1932. There is still plenty of opposition to the New York governor with Governor Ritchie, Newton Baker, and John Reed in a measure to old sectional prejudice. If the rule of seniority is followed, as is usually the case, the House will have not only a speaker from the southern state of Texas, but about thirty chairmen out of a possible forty-six, of the congressional committees, hailing from below the Mason and Dixon line. This is not entirely to the liking of the northern Democrats, and already there are to be heard charges of "Dixie domination" of Congress.

So far as the Republican situation is concerned there is little change. Officials of the National Committee say that there is no question about the renomination of President Hoover on the next Republican convention. They say that it will be without organized opposition. Thus far the only Republicans who have come out in the open in their angling for the domination against Mr. Hoover have been Governor Pinchot of Pennsylvania, and former Senator France of Maryland. Friends of Senator Borah are said to have offered him support if he would agree to make the race but there is no evidence that he will do so. Of late there has been some revival in the newspapers of the gossip concerning Senator Hiram Johnson as a candidate but the California Senator, although he has vigorously criticized the administration's foreign policy, has said nothing about being a candidate for president.

BANCROFT HAS STELLAR ROLE IN NEW FILM

A Pictured Bit of Industry With An Ambition—Mad Man Piling Up Wealth

For what purpose the accumulation of wealth by economies and a whip-lashed will to work, if friendships are lost and love is stifled and repelled?

Why should "ambition" ride roughshod and sint golden castles on a distant horizon, when only romance and love will ever fill such domiciles with thoughtful friends and loving children?

In the picture drama "Rich Man's Folly" which appears at the theatre, from Saturday to Monday these pertinent questions are the theme of a story of intriguing interest. They are the basis of dramatic episodes that crowd the action of a marvelous picture drama George Bancroft has the stellar role of "Brock Trumbull," an ambitious, money-grabbing ship-builder who sidles all his gentler qualities for money and a mad ambition.

This is just the kind of work in which Bancroft excels, character impersonation. He lives the part. A hard-fisted, domineering man is born on the screen. Success follows success. Wealth piles up. But the tide turns. Friends desert and his family is estranged. Money dwindles and his new wife leaves. He faces failure. Then at last the folly of it all comes to him. He reaches out to his daughter, whom he never loved and always opposed, groping, longing for the love and happiness he had always spurned, but which he now realizes is the only thing that makes life worth while.

To fully interpret such a role requires experience, talent technique, Bancroft stretches himself and puts everything he has into the role.

The picture is filled with incidents; the clash and clang of a great shipbuilding plant with its thousands of workers. It is a great industrial epic in which photography as well as the players has an important role. In the cast there are many screen favorites whom picture fans always like to see.

Unwittingly the judges in a recent Viennese beauty contest influenced the casting of a feature picture in Hollywood.

The judges in Vienna were continually searching for the perfect type of native beauty, which fitted in exactly with the needs of the casting office at Fox Studios where they were booking for a leading woman to costar with Charles Farrell in "Heartbreak," the romantic drama which plays at the Palace Theatre beginning Wednesday. The script called for her to represent the fairest of Austria's daughters, and to portray the role of a countess—an exacting requirement, even in Hollywood.

However, casting directors are well aware of the uncommon skill which Viennese gentlemen select their beauties, so they waited patiently for the decision of the contest before choosing the heroine for the picture.

Finally, the Viennese committee, which included artists and sculptors, agreed that Marie Von Elsler was "the most perfect blonde in Vienna or anywhere else on the European continent."

When this final decision and report was handed down, the powers that are in the Fox casting office, breathed a prayer of thanks because they had already practically decided upon Madge Evans as the most suitable actress to fill the coveted role. They were exceedingly grateful that their choice almost exactly coincided with the selection made by the serious-minded Viennese—admitted authorities on such matters.

Miss Evans like Fraulein Elsler has golden-blonde hair. She is one-half inch shorter and weighs two pounds less. This beauty also recently scored in "Gently Hands" plays the leading feminine role in "Heartbreak," story of courage and love that could survive tragedy and misunderstanding.

Farrell is said to excel even his performance in "Merely Mary Ann." Hardie Albright, Paul Cavanagh and John Arledge are the other featured players. Alfred Werker directed.

Messrs George Holmes and Fred Hoyo, with their wives, who have been visiting at the homes of relatives in Marion township for two weeks, returned to their homes in Detroit Monday morning.

WOOD WISDOM
If you buy home materials at home and there is anything wrong you can go and hold of the merchant at once and get things adjusted. Not so easy if you are dealing with a stranger at a distance. Worth thinking about, Ark the fellow who has had trouble.

If you know you are right and stand you are wrong—you are married.

Yes, you have heard about the fellow who in a match to see if his tank was empty and found it wasn't, also the fellow who raced to the crossing to beat the train, but didn't find you hear of your neighbor who bought a new roof from a smooth stranger from the big city, thinking it was better than Mule-Hide, and seen found to his grief that it wasn't? It takes only a little investigation at home to make sure before investing, and it costs nothing to inquire.

A customer demands the best from his local dealer and gets it; has it charged for six months or so, and if there is a change, gets an adjustment. The place where he can get all of that is the best place to trade.

Though Mule-Hide roofing is beautiful in its range of colors, the greatest beauty to about it is its dependability. Every bit of it comes a double guarantee. Better let us explain to you what that means. It won't cost you a cent to hear about it.

Two Scotchmen had a bet to be paid by the one who caught the best fish, and one went to fishing without bait, while the other would not put in his line when he had a bite.

Western Devices Find Their Way Into Tibet

Until Colonel Younghusband's expedition from India climbed and fought its way into Lhasa in 1904, Tibet was most effectively closed to the outside world. Its very physical inaccessibility made it easy for its lamely and ungodless inhabitants to maintain their shortsighted isolation, while the currents of world progress swept by the mountain gates of the mysterious and forbidden land. However, we hear now that many of the devices of western civilization are beginning to find their way into the country, surreptitiously big steely, Sidney Borries that snake water ge ngdill and safety razors to take the place of yaks, which are commonly in nomadic use. Also the women are reported to be adopting the lipstick, though soap has not yet been introduced. And along with the coming of modernity there becomes a factor in life, until wathout here been seen in the city of Lhasa. Wherever the obstacles trade will find a way to satisfy widespread human desires, and contraband satisfactions are being "smuggled" into Tibet much as they are in other lands.

THE STORY

At nightfall, in the hill city of New Orleans, in the year 1841, Lorry Garde, recently an officer under General Jackson, is approached by the strange aura of chivalry, romance and adventure that clings to the person of Aristide Marmont, whose beauty enchants him. Beginning this adventure of the elder of the two Marmont Fatou a duel ends with Aristide and wounds one. Afterward Lorry is summoned to the governor's council to the Marmont home where he meets Fatou Rose Hood and Frances Kellog refuse to a garden where to overhears a plot to assassinate Spanish exile L. Vermeuse. Intercepted by Garde, Fatou is prevented overhearing succeeding conversation in which Vermeuse tells Aristide Lorry's knowledge of the plot. Aristide and Vermeuse leave the house, and Lorry, alone with Fatou, confesses his love for her. Aristide returns to hear and overhear. Vermeuse tells Aristide under Fatou's window. On hand are the musicians to hear and overhear. Aristide, the lady of his love for Vermeuse, and Fatou's father, Governor Marmont, on hand are the musicians to hear and overhear. Aristide, the lady of his love for Vermeuse, and Fatou's father, Governor Marmont, on hand are the musicians to hear and overhear. An attempt to seize the exile fails.

She bowed her head and the slim shoulders drooped. "I know, Monsieur, that is another reason why she pressed her hands over her heart. "I—I do not understand."

"When have they done it? Fingers Furon said recently, the subject—

"We are approaching the shores of Venezuela," she said, "and tomorrow, as the sun rises—" She raised her hands and let them fall in a gesture of hopelessness. "I have tried to save them . . . I do not understand Aristide, in some things he is hard—hard!"

I did not have to ask her what they intended to do with Lorin Garde, who, as far as they knew, had run his hit with the forces of revolution, who had hidden his identity behind the masquerade of frivolity. I knew.

"What have they done with Marmont?" "Marmont!" she answered. "Monsieur Marmont, he of the dark face and heavy shoulders. They have done nothing. He is free—a great author and brave man though sometimes stupid."

Now I laughed laughed pure! I saw a deep hurt in her eyes and her chin begin to tremble. "Forgive," said I, my mood suddenly has never quite forsaken me."

She had called Marmont stupid. What was it Fraucois had said of her? "If the occasion questions my innocence and even lies comes so suspicious as to confine the little to me himself and the small crew of this ship." Surely, Francois had not done others by halves. If secrecy and brains could win, Beauvi would never lose.

"If it helps you to laugh in the shadow of the gallows, Monsieur Garde, your mood seems to a kindred gift." She turned away as though to leave me, but came back again. "I—I want you to know that I have tried so hard to save you, but I am helpless. I am not even a pawn in this tragedy they call the game of empire."

"May I claim a favor, Fatou Mi'ette—just one—before you go?"

"Gravi." She raised her full face questioningly. "If there is aught—"

Now, while she kept her face upturned to me I studied the smooth forehead, the high arch of eyebrow, the deep blue of her eyes, the curving lips and the tender curve of cheek and chin.

"May I tell you that you are beautiful, and may I offer apology for having followed you, for having wounded your—pride—for having wounded Le Vicomte de Beauvi, and for that night of madness and terror in New Orleans? I wonder if you have imagined me crazy?"

"If it was that, Monsieur, I do not remember." I think we cannot read Aristide. "That you should laugh at the—a—wounded stranger to me. And that you should have followed us from New Orleans. Is it that the art of a game man?"

"No, Your Majesty, it is not." Could I tell her of my mad worship, of that overwhelming love of mine which that love could not bring her either of us? To have told her would merely have added to her embarrassment. For I had only a short night of life left to me.

"I am going to Adolfo," she said at last, "and tell him that the Baron Amerlande is not responsible that the Vermeuses, Perez and Santini, held him captive. Adolfo will do much for me."

"But not that, Your Majesty, for Adolfo does not love me. He has every reason not to love me, for I have wounded him."

"I shall try, at least."

I knew she would fail, knew she would not return, so I tried every conventional subterfuge to detain her, with no success, for she extended a hand to me, smiling. "Adieu."

Even as I took the slim fingers, the sound of a pistol shot came from the dock above us, followed by the roar of a commanding voice.

"Captain Alvarez," she cried; "the voice of Captain Alvarez. What is it, Monsieur?"

Another shot, another yell; a shrill cry, and swift, pounding feet on the steps. Our guards disappeared in the gloom of the channel, running for the upper deck. We six were filled with the menace of an approaching storm as well as that of mutiny.

"What is it?" she screamed holding to me. "What has happened, Senor, tell me?"

I laughed dizzily. "The should Monsieur is playing the game according to his orders. Unless something is done swiftly and well, this ship will be, very soon, in the hands of those who fight for Simon Bolivar. It is a privateering armada, and is, therefore, a welcome prize for the revolutionists. We—what are quickly."

"But you, Senor, are in the service—"

"Not at all; I have never served Francisco nor Bolivar; only the Almighty—"

"Hush!" said she, completing my sentence.

I—hush! How prophetic had been that usage, for it was at once a caress and a deception. "Will you remain here then, in safety, while I—?"

"No, Senor, no! I will go with you where is Fatou and—"

I knew she visualized Adolfo, but she did not call his name.

So, hand in hand we sped along the freight-cluttered channel. I led her to the companion ladder and half lifted her up through the quarter-deck hatch, from which position of vantage we were able to overlook the upper deck. It seemed at first deserted, but the report of a pistol came from the starboard rail and the helmsman, a shrill scream followed it, and a tall figure, leaping toward a slim boy whose body was braced against the tafferail, struck the rail, bent over it and flopped back again to the deck, where he lay, grotesquely flattened. A puff of smoke wafted above the two figures.

"Brother of Christ!" the Sabrita trembled. "Pedro! My brother has killed a man."

Now the figures raised from the foredeck and the formidable one of them, a short swordsman again with one bound was lifted a left hand and dived into the face of a sailor whose grasping fingers, clutching wildly, found the throat of his adversary and the two went down in a screaming heap.

"Adolfo," cried the woman at my side. "Adolfo! Oh, the terror of this thing!"

And the last I remember my soul stirred with the hope of freedom again.

"My brother!" she gasped, "I must go to my brother!"

Well . . . as long as she didn't want to go to Adolfo.

The clamorous crew had begun to add their fury to the storm of human hatred that already possessed the ship. I had seen those tropical storms before and I knew that the greatest danger to the Santa Lucrecia lay not in the contending human forces on her deck but in the power of the approaching tempest.

I made my way in the rising tumult of the storm to the wheelhouse, which, as I had suspected, was empty. My puny efforts in saving the craft around were poor enough, yet I knew that, riding before the rushing wind, the plunging ship was due for certain disaster.

Looking I clung tenaciously to the swaying wheel. The Santa Lucrecia, pitching prodigiously, dived into the body of a mountain of black-green sea, but the midmainmast came down with a score of rent timbers that lifted above the rail of the stern. It fell aft, crushing the wheelhouse, but I had driven out of the path of its fall and, buffeted by the waters, had come up short against the low wall of the after deck.

Clinging desperately to a stanchion, I wondered if there was another soul alive on board the ship, which was now only a plaything of the storm.

Insurance Concern One of the World's Oldest

"The London insurance organization known as Lloyd's was formed in London in the Seventeenth century. It was not incorporated until 1871, when it was done by act of parliament. It takes its name from that of Edward Lloyd, who kept a coffee house in Tower street, London. In his place these underwriters first began to transact their business and it became their headquarters until 1774, when they removed to the Royal exchange, where they have been ever since.

Lloyd's does not undertake insurance business as a corporation. The business is conducted by members who write their own account, but in accordance with the rules of the society, which runs counter to the stock exchanges and similarly regulated market places.

Lloyd's is also an organization for the collection and distribution of marine intelligence, and this is published in Lloyd's List. The List, founded in 1696 as Lloyd's News, is with one exception the oldest current newspaper in Europe. The corporation also publishes various works for the benefit of members, shippers and the business world in general.

Gorilla's Feet Like Man's

The gorilla has a foot more like man's than have any of the other primates, Dr. William L. Straus, Jr., of the Johns Hopkins university, has reported as a result of extensive studies on the feet of a gorilla. Both the muscles and the bones of the gorilla's foot are more like those found in men than are the chimpanzee's feet. Doctor Straus attributed this greater similarity to the gorilla's way of living. Chimpanzees and the other great apes live much more in trees on the gorilla because he is so large, lives chiefly on the ground as man does. Consequently he uses his feet more like man than do the other primates and the bones and muscles have developed accordingly.

MOON'S EFFECT ON THINGS OF EARTH

Wireless Found on List It Influences.

Never quarrel with your wife when the moon is full.

That was a piece of advice given recently by one who has spent a great part of his life in researching our chronic differences.

Here is one instance in accordance of asserted beliefs in the influence of the moon on the nerves and the doings of men. Can there be any truth in them?

There are few superstitions not founded on a bedrock of fact if only we dig deep enough to discover it. There are, for instance, many practical considerations against gaining under a ladder. It is unlucky for you if the ladder slips and falls on you, or if you happen to receive part of the contents of a pot of paint. It would be equally mistaken for any passenger of the luckier element you inadvertently brush against. It stands to reason.

Superstitions dealing with the moon are found in every part of the world, and undertying them all is a belief that the moon has an influence upon the well-being and mind of men, but of animals and plants, that pagan religions have a moon goddess.

In considering the question, we cannot help being struck by the number of ways in which the moon affects our lives. It revolves round the earth in approximately twenty-eight days, and from the moon was derived the original twenty-eight hours, divided into four weeks one for each quarter. The moon is the male orgine of the tides and it was, before the invention of clocks, the watchman of ours first noticed that the highest tides occur along the lines of full and new moon; the low tides at the first and last quarters.

Dogs, wolves and foxes bay the full moon, though no other beasts have affixed their bills to the way. Most animals are disturbed when the moon blots out the sun during an eclipse. The biggest catches of certain sea fish are made at times of the full moon. In the tropics moon excitement, a particular dullness seems to the surface in countless thousands during the full moon, and is seen at no other time. In some parts of the world, where the atmosphere is very clear, the moon's light is so strong that "moon-sickness" is to be guarded against. Wounds or changes are most likely to occur when the moon enters a new quarter.

A lately ascertained instance of the moon's influence has come discovered recently. It has been found that long-distance wireless transmissions on certain wave lengths are greatly affected by the state of the moon. This is due, in one, to the ionized state of the atmosphere produced by moonlight.

The moon is a cold dead world which appears to absorb all the heat that reaches it from the sun, but to reflect a very large part of the light. Moonlight is particularly rich in ultra-violet rays, and we know that these have a cellular influence upon human animal and plant health. For the reason alone it is quite possible that the influence of the full moon upon us may be greater than it is generally believed throughout the ages it has been followed that human people are more restless at times of full moon, the word "lunatic" itself comes from the Latin luna, meaning the moon. Nor can we doubt that to the moonlight we owe all the superstitions a young moon fixes lightly upon in thoughts of love.

Quite possibly, too, the pull of the moon, which causes tides not only in the seas but also in the soil earth, has its effect upon us. Those who naturally become excited at the full and new moon, when the pull is strongest.

Dog Found Way Home

Traveling 400 miles across country from Lamar Silver Lake to Hammond, says the Canadian Press, "Tip Top," a dog owned by Bob A. Plummer of Hammond, has created sensation of a canine record for long-distance pathfinding without guide. John Hebert, who worked on the Canadian farm of Plummer for some time, left to locate Silver Lake by "Scented trail" or "driving across country. Before long on, Plummer gave the dog to him. The journey having been completed, Hebert wrote Plummer stating the dog seemed to be enjoying himself to his new environment. Then for three months passed. Several weeks later Vierly was back home on the Plummer farm.

Dog Reveals Death of Master.

How a dog revealed the suicide-hanging of his master was told at the inquest at Lewiston, Me., held over Sidney A. Phipps. Mr. Sam Starkweather of East Dedham said that he was working over wood-ground when a little white dog ran up and stopped around him. "I tried to shoo it away," he said, "but it would not go. I said: 'Where is your master?' and the dog began to bark furiously. It led me to a shed, leaning against a tree and hanging from a rope."

Trace Respiratory Diseases to Dust

According to prominent health authorities, at least 50% of the prevalent disease gets entrance to the body through the respiratory tract (or R. I. H.H. America's leading authorities on air-conditioning states). "While some of these infections may be from measure droplets from the mouth and nose, still the great majority are caused by dust particles of some kind gaining entrance to the tract with their every-ever present air-bearing organisms." Because of this, although as a means for weather and temperature control, air conditioning systems make it possible to live cleaner and more healthful air, of course this is debatable ground.

Draft Defined

A draft is air in motion that exerts more force from the back than from the front. It is normally undesirable according to the Holland Institute of Ventilation, of Holland, Michigan. However, certain parts of the human body require more movement of air than others in order to feel comfortable. Hence in the modern air conditioning system, the available supply of fresh air-conditioning volume is divided so that the air is uniformly distributed to prevent air stagnation in local concentration, yet the air is not of sufficient velocity to cause a sensation of draft in the most sensitive skin.

Napoleon No Scholar

Napoleon did not distinguish himself in school. As one writer puts it: Napoleon's scholastic career was not brilliant and he received his rewards seldom in the artillery in 1785 without having given evidence of any marked ability, except, perhaps, that of holding his own counsel and of carrying himself to the end any attitude adopted. These traits, which afterward made him feared equally in the council chamber and on the battle field, he inherited from his mother.

Junior Play

Now that the activity ban has been lifted and the Juniors are hard at work on "The Enemy" which is scheduled for December 11th. Though this play is sometimes called a war play it would be more appropriate to term it one of peace, for the whole theme is of brotherhood and a plea for international understanding.

Articles by Channing Pollack, the author of this drama, may be found in the November American and the November Ladies Home Journal. His latest play "The Home Beautiful" is enjoying an unusually successful road tour after record breaking performances in New York and Chicago.

On Friday evening Mrs. Dowd will sing at East Jordan at their Junior Class play, "The Millionaire." She will be accompanied by Marjorie Carey.

The tiny horses and coaches are part of the old-time coaching scene on the 1931 tuberculosis Christmas seals which will be sent out the week by the Michigan Tuberculosis Association and affiliated local societies. The seal design also includes a theme "Christmas Greetings" and the double-barred cross, emblem of the anti-tuberculosis movement.

DOUBT SHROUDS ORIGIN OF TERM "SOB SISTER"

In Title Of Romantic Drama, Featuring Janice Dunn and Linda Watkins

When the "new woman" and the "new journalism" came in with the 20th century, and circulation-hungry editors were sending gilt women reporters to cover murder trials and weep in the wake of the sordid confessions, some genius called them ladies' editors.

There seems to be a great difference of opinion as to who was the originator of "Sob Sister" which, incidentally, is the title of the Fox drama coming to the Palace Theatre for Saturday and Sunday with Janice Dunn, who flamed to stardom in "Bad Girl," and Linda Watkins in the featured leads.

Frank Virtetlly, editor of Funk and Wagnall's Standard Dictionary, claims the honor for the late Thomas A. Dorgan—"Tad" to you—of the N. Y. Evening Journal. Frank Scully, bridge of the American Press Association thinks Bert Leston Taylor, George Ade and Montague Glass coined the expression. Others say George Ade and David Graham Phillips.

Ada Patterson, one of the earliest sob sisters, disagrees with them all. She contends that the phrase was an outgrowth of the famous Thaw murder trial in New York in 1907. Women reporters were assigned to this case to write stories sympathizing with Evelyn Thaw. Regular reporters ridiculed the women, referring to them as the "sympathy squad," until one day there appeared in the Sun in an unsigned article, a sentence calling them "sob sisters."

With Dunn and Miss Watkins in "Sob Sister" is Minna Gombell who attracted so much attention in "Bad Girl." Edwin Burke, dialogist of that hit wrote the lines for "Sob Sister." Alfred Santell directed.

News From The Public Schools

Thanksgiving From A Student's Viewpoint

Why are we thankful for thanksgiving? First and perhaps most important, is that we will have no school from Wednesday night until Monday morning. Second, when we think of that turkey, cranberries, plum pudding and pumpkin pie we certainly begin to be thankful beforehand. Third, we are thankful that our teachers may spend the week end in other places. But we are truly thankful for the health and prosperity that Charlevoix has enjoyed during the past year and that we have not had to endure the suffering and want that is prevalent in larger cities.

Junior-Teachers Meeting

An exceptionally interesting and well-attended meeting of the P. T. A. was held last Monday evening in the High School. The Boys Glee Club gave two selections which were quite good. Miss Dykstra spoke on "Democratic Greetings" and the double-barred cross, emblem of the anti-tuberculosis movement.

Junior Play Staff

In recent years the work of the producing staff of a play has at last come in for its share of praise. In many little theatres those people who have spent long weary hours in carpentering, focusing lights, sewing, et cetera, take a final curtain call beside the actors, for it is to them that a great share of the success of any play is due.

Following is the staff for "The Enemy":

Electrician, Winifield Kirby.

Costumes, Ethel Powers, Margaret McGann.

Assistants and ushers will be appointed at an early date.

Jottings

The orchestra held its first rehearsal Tuesday, November 24.

The tip of Michigan Class C conference met at the Perry hotel in Petoskey, Saturday the 21st, for the fall meeting and dinner. East Jordan was given the conference championship in football. Gaylord also has had a good team but has not played enough conference games to be eligible for consideration. Roger City was admitted to the conference.

Three or more of the HI-Y boys, with an adult leader, will go to Ann Arbor, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, to attend the older boys conference.

The basketball squad is practicing every night now. If they continue with the same energy they have displayed so far Charlevoix will surely have marked success this year.

Mr. Bash enjoyed several days hunting last week.

THANKSGIVING DAY, NOV. 26TH

A PROCLAMATION BY THE GOVERNOR

The last Thursday in November has been set aside by time honored custom as Thanksgiving Day to demonstrate the gratitude of a thankful people to Almighty God for the blessings which He has bestowed.

In periods of abundance it is natural to contemplate our material possessions with ill-advised pride. In periods of emergency it becomes a test of honest appreciation.

We have much to be thankful for—good lives and health, our national peace and security, and the opportunity to serve our fellow men in greater measure than before. We have gained a better understanding of human values and we have learned lessons of profound humility. We have come to evaluate our spiritual possessions without undue regard for national prosperity on the rock of national conscience through unselfishness. We have learned the tremendous value of such neglected intangibles as confidence and faith. We have set out to cultivate greater poise and balance in our economic and social relationships.

Therefore, as a day for the people of this Commonwealth to observe in such manner that all may have cause for thankfulness, I, Wilber M. Brucker, Governor of the State of Michigan, do hereby designate Thursday, November 26, 1931, that the day may indeed be a day of Thanksgiving for all our people.

I request its observance by all our citizens in a spirit of prayer and praise, assembled in their respective places of worship or in their homes, for the purpose of gratefully acknowledging and returning thanks to Divine Providence for life, health, peace, and guidance.

Given under my hand and the Great Seal of the State of Michigan, this 23rd day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and thirty-one, and of the Commonwealth the ninty-sixth.

WILBER M. BRUCKER

Secretary of State.

PETOSKEY SCHOOL TEACHER MEETS WITH ACCIDENT

Miss Virginia Carol, a teacher in the Petoskey schools, when making her way north enroute to Petoskey, after a week end visit somewhere south of the city, encountered a gang of dogs in front of the Thomas Brady home on Sheridan Street about 7:00 o'clock Monday morning.

She tried her brakes suddenly and her efforts to avoid the dogs caused her car to turn over about three times on the east side of the road. She was fortunate enough to escape injury and showed no sign of excitement. However her car was very badly damaged. She soon procured another car and continued her trip to Petoskey.

GOLDEN WEDDING ANNIVERSARY EVENT

Were Residents of Charlevoix For Nearly Twenty Years

The golden wedding anniversary of Fred A. and Jennie C. Watson, which occurred Monday, November 9, was an event of more than passing interest to their host of friends and acquaintances, throughout this whole region. The period making this occasion possible began in 1881 when the young couple were married in Plano, Ill., the bride's native town; and after the wedding they came at once to this village, which had been the home of Mr. Watson since coming here as a lad with his father's family in 1869.

About five years after they came to Frankfort it appeared to them advantage, from a business standpoint to move to Charlevoix; but they did not forget to return to Frankfort, though they spent nearly twenty years in Charlevoix, returning to this town in 1905; and so the beginning and the larger part of the years of their married life, spent here entitled them to a place among the narrowing number of those whose lives reach back into the time when Frankfort was a group of scattered homes centering about a fringe of sawmills along the edge of Betsey bay.

It is suggestive to recall that, apart from the profiters of sawmill lumber, Mr Watson was the first man to tell the world that Frankfort was a place that's name when he shipped his first thousand dozen of wooden potato mashers, each of which should have borne the legend, "Made in Frankfort." They were turned on the lathes of the first factory to be established in Frankfort, which also turns employed thirty men, owing to an accident, he was compelled to retire from the factory service and associated himself with his father, Thomas Watson, in the conduct of an undertaking business, this was in 1906, and in 1924, one year before the death of his father he retired from the business which he has continued to maintain in a very successful way, under the "Watson" name, which has been carried by the firm now since 1871.

During the years of life, in all their undertakings, Mr. Watson and his wife have always cooperated with each other in rendering the community efficient service and friendly helpfulness. They have been honorable citizens, good neighbors and splendid friends and have maintained an unsullied reputation, while they shared with the daughter and son resident to the development of a raw lumbering town into the beautiful village of these later years.

At the golden wedding dinner served for them by the Social Circle in the parlors of the Congregational church, they were glad to have all with them about the board, their two daughters, Mrs. John Dougherty, of Frankfort and Mrs. Wm. Joslin of Munising with their husbands, their three sons, Dea of Frankfort, Thomas of Birch Run and Robert of East Jordan, with the wives of the last two named. Five grand children were present, Mrs. George Charters and Fred Dougherty of Frankfort, Mrs. F. W. Warren of Detroit, Miss Ida Watson of Birch Run and Harry Watson of East Jordan; also four great grandchildren, Robert Dougherty, George and Gladys Charters and Jerome Warren; and three children of Wm. Joslin, their son-in-law. Mrs. Carl Bittner, and cousins and friends.

DONATIONS OF CLOTHING NEEDED FOR WELFARE

Entertainment and Finance Committee Appointed; Post Officers Conference at Bay City

Commander Lee T. Allard of the local Legion Post is appealing to the public of Charlevoix for further assistance in the welfare work of the post. Clothing and shoes are urgently needed for both adults and children and it is hoped that this appeal will be generously met. A young lad, desirous of entering a school in the southern part of the state, but destitute of clothing for the winter has been comfortably outfitted from a supply donated to the Legion and placed on his way. Many a great deal more of such work remains to be done. Will you help the Legionnaires in this?

Two new and important committees were appointed by Commander Allard at the regular meeting Tuesday evening. These are the Entertainment and Finance Committee, whose duties it will be, respectively, to provide recreation and entertainment for the members and to plan ways and to plan projects for making money for the Legion, and see that they are carried out successfully.

The Mid-Winter Post Officers Conference of the Department of Michigan will be held at Bay City on December 8th and 9th next. This will be a strictly business session of post officers and will include a school of instructions for post commanders and adjutants and also one for welfare officers. COWBOY SOMBREROS DOFFED AS O'BRIEN STOPS STAMPEDE

"Any hand who can turn a stampede can ride for my money."

"Wingate" Bean, "Oklahoma" Martin, Herman Nolan, Dick Hunter and "Ki Yi" Lyon are veteran range riders. They've been in the saddle since their hoople legs could straddle a cayuse. They're not very easily impressed—especially by movie cowboys—but they think a lot of George O'Brien.

The reason for their good opinion of George, is that while they were working with the burly star on his latest Fox picture, which is titled "Riders Of The Purple Sage," when pictures of the Palace Theatre will see, beginning Wednesday and remaining on through Thursday they watched him perform the feat referred to above, the most dangerous a cattle hand can be called on to execute, turning a stampeding herd, during a sequence of the picture.

The scene occurs when enemies of the hero start a fierce cattle running lead in the picture, stampede her herd of longhorns. O'Brien, who is staying at the ranch to protect her from these foes, sees the danger and rides to the rescue, he fair the scene progressed according to plan.

But one of the "menace" players became too zealous. He rowled a steer along

The London zoo now has one of the world's rarest ostrich-like birds which seems to have changed little in its physical structure since prehistoric times. The bird has two sharp claws on its wings. When danger threatened it dived from its nest into the river and uses the claws to climb back.

When forty grown it resembles a small ostrich, with a long neck and the running tasks distinctly reptilian. Its home is South America.—Associated Press.

What the Reindeer Means to Alaska

What the only reindeer on this continent now are in Alaska, and the territory's assistance in restocking its pastures so strikingly bears out the prophecy of Dr. Sheldon Jackson, who first brought the animals to Alaska from Siberia, that they would prove a boon to the natives of the frozen north.

Dr. Jackson's prophecy that the reindeer would be a source of food, clothing and transportation for the Eskimos has been fulfilled to the letter. Today the Alaskan herds are estimated at 300,000 animals, and the natives are prosperous.

Before the reindeer were introduced into Alaska, in 1891, the Eskimos were in a deplorable condition. Their principal food was whale meat, and they were dependent on the whaling fleets for their guns, ammunition, clothing and other necessities. Frequently the whalers were caught in the ice and the natives starved to death.

Dr. Jackson's plan was to import reindeer from Siberia and Lapland, and to teach the natives how to herd them. The first importation, in 1891, consisted of 171 animals. Of these, 16 died on the way to Alaska. Others died during the first winter, and the herd was reduced to 140 animals.

Despite this discouraging start, the herd increased rapidly. By 1902 it had grown to 1,280 animals. By 1914 it had reached 10,000. By 1929 it had passed the 200,000 mark.

Meanwhile, the Eskimos had learned how to herd the animals, how to kill them for food, how to make clothing from their skins, how to use them for transportation. Many Eskimos became wealthy reindeer owners.

Then, in 1914, the government began to restrict the ownership of reindeer to natives. Whites were forbidden to own herds. Reindeer meat was made available to the general public, but the industry remained in the hands of the natives.

Today the reindeer industry is in the hands of a native cooperative association, which has a membership of 1,200 Eskimos and owns 100,000 animals. Its herds are scattered over the entire Seward peninsula, and the animals are driven to the coast for shipment to the United States.

Reindeer meat is now a staple article of food in many parts of the United States. Its flavor is said to be similar to that of beef, but it is more tender and juicy. Reindeer skins are used for clothing, rugs and robes. Reindeer antlers are made into buttons, knife handles and other articles.

Reindeer are also used for transportation in Alaska. They are driven in harness, and they can pull a sled at a speed of 15 miles an hour for a distance of 50 miles without tiring. They are also used as pack animals, and can carry a load of 200 pounds.

Reindeer are interesting animals. They are the only species of deer in which both the male and the female grow antlers. The antlers are shed annually, and new ones grow in their place. The new antlers are covered with a soft skin, called velvet, which is filled with blood vessels. The velvet is rubbed off when the antlers are full grown.

Reindeer are gregarious animals, and they migrate in herds. Their migrations are governed by the weather and the food supply. In winter they feed on moss and lichens, which they find by digging through the snow with their hoofs. In summer they feed on grass and other vegetation.

Reindeer are very hardy animals. They can withstand cold of 60 degrees below zero, and they can live in the open all winter. They are also very prolific. Does usually have two fawns at a birth, and sometimes they have three.

Reindeer are not native to Alaska. They were brought there from Siberia and Lapland. Dr. Sheldon Jackson, who was sent to Alaska by the government to establish schools among the natives, found the whole community with starvation as a result of the depletion by white men of the game which on which the natives had depended for food. He suggested the importation of the first domesticating cattle with reindeer. The original importation consisted of Lapland and Siberian reindeer, the ultimate and foundation of which remained that of Alaska.

Returning to the states and unable to interest capital in the venture, Doctor Jackson sought contributions from the public. He raised $2,146 with which the first animals were purchased in Siberia. The natives, however, were unfamiliar with reindeer and refused to have anything more to do with them.

In 1892 the matter was presented to Congress then became entirely interested and many appropriations made possible investigations through the next two years until, in 1894, when the Russian government put an embargo on further importations from Siberia, 1,280 animals had been taken into Alaska.

The Siberian herdsmen proved unwilling to go to the states for the natives, and for a time the venture was threatened with failure. It was then that Doctor Jackson went for advice to Dr. Sheldon Jackson, who was at that time superintendent of education in Alaska. Dr. Sheldon Jackson was among the leaders of Lapland. Doctor Jackson's suits interested and soon aroused by a report on the industry there made by the professor.

In pursuance of Professor Anderson's advice, Lapp herders were employed to accompany the reindeer as instructors to the Eskimos. Each agreed to take 100 animals from the government herd for a period of years, at the end of which an equal number of reindeer were required to be returned to the government. The Lapps were promised to retain the increase.

The Eskimos were apprenticed to the Lapps for a period of four years. At the end of the first year each was given 25 reindeer; at the end of the second, eight; at the end of the third year, ten, and ten more at the end of the fourth year of training. With the increase each man's herd would be almost 100 head by the time he had completed his apprenticeship. He was well equipped to start in business for himself. Today, more than two-thirds of the reindeer of Alaska are owned by natives, of whom some 2,000 have been trained in their care.

The effect of this training on the Eskimos is one of the most important results of the enterprise. While the idea of domestication of reindeer industry has advanced the natives of Alaska through one entire stage of civilization—from the primitive to the pastoral, from nomadic hunters to settled men, independent, responsible, assured of support for themselves and an opportunity to acquire wealth. They have built accounts, purchased machinery, established and have adopted improved methods of sanitation and, in some instances, have built their houses from imported lumber.

Between 1918 and 1925 more than 1,000,000 pounds of reindeer meat was shipped to the United States from Alaska. Two hundred thousand pounds were shipped in 1927, while by 1925, the export had increased to 6,000,000 pounds. The export for 1931 was expected almost to double that of 1925, the amount depending on shipping facilities. Recurrent meat sells in Nome for 17 to 20 cents a pound. It can be delivered at Seattle for 35 cents a pound and, with increased shipping and improved methods of handling, even this price can be reduced.

Besides the meat, the reindeer industry is developing a valuable by-product in the velvet from the antlers. This is used in the manufacture of glandular products, and is worth from $1 to $2 a pound. Reindeer hides are also valuable, and the demand for them is increasing.

Within the next few years the Alaskan reindeer industry will be placed on a new basis. Under the present system the natives own the animals, but the government owns the land on which they graze. Plans are now under consideration for the transfer of the herds to the natives, and the establishment of a system of leases for the grazing lands.

Under the proposed plan, the natives will be organized into companies, each of which will be given a lease on a certain area of grazing land. The companies will be required to pay a rental for the land, and to maintain a certain number of animals. Each company will be allowed to kill a certain number of animals each year, and to sell the meat and other products.

Under the present system the natives are required to kill a certain number of animals each year, and to sell the meat to the government. The government then sells the meat to the public. The proposed plan will relieve the government of the necessity of handling the meat, and will give the natives a greater incentive to develop their herds.

TROUBLE BORROWING NOT FOR US

It was the grand old liberal cosmopolitan Thomas Jefferson, who said during the Napoleonic wars that if the European cows insisted on horning one another, the part of the American people should play was that of milking all of them.

In other words, Jefferson believed that if the nations of the old world were stupid enough to war with one another for territorial, trade and dynastic reasons, it was entirely proper that a nation which did not believe in wars waged for such selfish ends, should show better sense by profiting through peaceful commerce stimulated by the unwisdom of others. He believed in making peace pay better than war.

The world is filled with rumors of war. Its shadow falls on the Orient; soon it may fall on Europe. The United States will be affected by any great war, wherever fought, but it has nothing at stake which would justify entry into it, short of the invasion of our own soil. We need, more than ever, however, to put into effect what Washington called a "respectable posture of defense." If sparks fly this way, we need a good fire department to put them out before they burst into flame. The stronger we are in our ability to defend ourselves, the less likely it is that our weakness will be a temptation to attack from any quarter.

Whatever the technical rights of seaborne commerce, the risks of commerce with combatants, in case of war, should be taken beyond our borders by those who stand to directly profit by them. "In the midst of war, all laws are silent," and at such a time this nation cannot undertake to spend life to save property.

This country is ready to defend itself to the last dollar and the last worthwhile life, but it will do no more adventuring abroad in wars with the causes and purposes of which we have nothing rightfully to do.

Most of our pacifists want to involve the United States in every world-wide controversy on the quaint theory that the rest of the world is willing for us to settle these disputes, rather than merely become involved in them to the jeopardizing of our own peace.

Those who combine a sane love of peace with a true love of country believe that a nation which wants nothing but to maintain its own just rights and interests, without invasion of the just rights and interests of other nations, can best serve itself and the world by remaining neutral, rather than becoming a partisan, during the world conflicts so complex, so deeply rooted, so difficult to understand, involved in the international clashes of the old world which for centuries have been producing war, and now threaten war again.

PREPAREDNESS FOR DEFENSE

In spite of the frantic efforts of the pacifists and the vast sums they are spending on a propaganda designed to scuttle the American navy and render our army and national guard impotent for effective duty, the plain, common sense of the American people still convinces them that the best assurance for peace is an adequate defense. We do not desire to attack any other nation. Our chief duty is to see that we are so prepared for defense that any potential enemy will refrain from attacking us.

The efforts of the pacifists are especially childish at this time in view of the fact that not since the World War have there been so many clouds of possible strife lowering in the horizon. The present trouble in the Orient between China and Japan is a sufficient illustration of this.

In his Armistice Day address, President Hoover made this point when he warned his hearers that they must not take it for granted that peace has been assured by the heroic sacrifices of our soldiers in the World War. The President called attention to the sore spots left by the war and to the friction coming with the world-wide expansion of business and added:

"In every country men can secure public attention and even a living by stirring malignant forces of fear and hate of their neighbors. As a result of those forces the world is more heavily armed than even before the great war.

"All of these dangers present to statesmen a world where peace cannot be had by resolution and injunction alone. Peace is the product of preparedness for defense, the patient settlement of controversy and the dynamic development of the forces of good will. It is the result of the delicate balance of that realism born of human experience and of idealism born of the highest of human aspirations for international justice."

There is a great deal of truth in this. We all hope the day will come when international justice will rule the world, but we must not lose sight of the fact that Uncle Sam can only be assured of international justice at this time by an adequate preparedness for defense. All the rantings of the pacifists cannot change the actual world conditions of today.

With both sides so evenly matched this coming session of Congress may be like one of those 0 to 0 football games. And come to think of it, maybe the country will be just as well off if too much scoring isn't done.

Kentucky politicians have the right idea. They hold their election returns back for a day or two so they can be sure of plenty of first page headlines.

Who would ever thought the time would come when the farmers would celebrate when wheat go to sixty-five cents a bushel?

General Sinuts says the United States has too much gold, but so far as we are concerned we could always use a little more.

The galaxy of star hunters who went to the north shore by the tug Martin, returned by the same boat Tuesday evening. Several deer came with them.

Another resort will be established near Ironton. Last week parties from Burlington, Iowa, purchased from Miss Cherrie and Mrs. Adams, 295 acres near the Tenley farm just above the mouth of the Arm. It will be improved and cottages erected next season.

Expert Horner will arrive here Monday and set up the new three hundred dollar set of village books.

And now the business men of Charlevoix have a proposition to consider. They should at once unite the work of making the year factory a success from the start, and the start is now. Let us crawl out of our holes that the resort business has driven us into, and proclaim to the world that we are alive from October 1st till July 1st. Shall we do it or not?

The bridge machinery has arrived and the contractors, Erickson Bros., have begun the work of installing it.

Col. D. C. Wickham, who has been engaged at Sleeping Bear and Manitou Island superintending the construction of Life Saving station is in town. He accompanied F. J. Meeth and family to Ellsworth, and made a big hole in E. R. Harris' Thanksgiving turkey.

L. Shanahan left Monday for Petoskey, Mich., where today (Thanksgiving Day) he will be married to Miss Mary Dunham, formerly a popular Charlevoix teacher. Mr. Shanahan's many acquaintances join in wishing him and Mrs. Shanahan well in at home in about two weeks in Dr. LaFond's residence on Main street. The Sentinel congratulates.

Hon. Richard Knight writes the Sentinel from Aconitook, Ont., that the people there are troubled in spirit because of the effects of the McKinley bill, the farmers only receiving 35 cents per bushel for their barley. Last evening "Uncle Dick" was to attend a public meeting called to consider the future of Canada, and discuss the question of annexation.

The largest lift of fish ever entering into this port by a fish tug was brought in Friday night by the Clara Belle, her load being something over six tons. Her nets had been out two days.

Messrs. Stanley Bush and A. M. Otis of South Arm, and Reuben Glenn, and Mr. Page of East Jordan and their ladies were down to the Eastern Star dance Friday night. The event was a pronounced success.

Moses Cooper, D. E. Scroggie and Chauncey Howe were attending court at Boyne City last week.

THE DEER SLAYERS

Most of the deer-hunters who went to the Black River country, have returned with their trophies.

Lon Mudge brought in two, one of them being a buck of 255 pounds. Geo. Burns brought in one; E. L. Harris, one, and N. A. Shores, two. Egbert Carpenter, C. V. Cook and Hubert Ackert have not yet returned but information from their camp does not speak well for Carpenter and Cook, old and experienced hunters that they are. Hube remained in camp while Egbert and C. V. swamped the woods for game. The cook killed three within sight of the camp, without interrupting him in his camp labors in the least. We hope "old pap" and C. V. will yet redeem themselves before they return.

WHY WE ARE THANKFUL

First of all, that Providence has smiled upon us, and that peace, plenty, and happiness prevail as a rule.

That potatoes are only 25 cents per bushel.

That Capt. Hontercu of the Petoskey Record, has reformed and thrown away his pipe and tobacco pouch.

That Charlevoix merchants are doing a prosperous business.

That the Chief of Engineers has asked for an appropriation of $46,000 for the improvement of Charlevoix harbor next year.

That our distinguished fellow citizen, President Buttars, is on the road to recovery.

That, thus far this season, Charlevoix sailors have braved the elements without loss of life or property.

That this will be the last winter of staging to connect with a railroad train.

The statement that Charlevoix has the largest number of telephones per capita is disputed by Three Rivers, which claims that distinction with an instrument for every forty-six persons.

Hard cider and Indians, when combined in proportion of a few drinks to one Indian, are producing the phenomena known as "tanglefoot" hereabouts, according to the Traverse City Telegraph. Hard cider give a Northern Michigan Indian "tanglefoot"? Oh, no! Hard cider wouldn't even make him smile.

The State's Protection—In the various vexations of life it is not unusual that the interests of men and corporations conflict one with another; neither are cases isolated where the laudable interests of individuals conflict with progress and improvement and may temporarily stay their advancement; but in this age of Erie Railroads and Mont Cenis Tunnels, the car will move, and there is no obstacle that can retard its ultimate advancement. Our River Improvement upon which hangs the future prosperity of our county, perhaps fails under this order of things. It has its enemies and why should it not? That it has enemies is evident from its slow progress, and its many disappointments, which, it is believed by some, were the direct results of opposing individual influence. We also have the open avowal of one who exerts no small influence. How, then, shall these obstacles be surmounted? We have heretofore spoken disparagingly of the chartered corporation which had for its object the improvement of the navigation of Pine River, and it is not our intention to take back what we said in regard to its past usefulness. But it is now evident that our future success lies in this corporation, be it in part owned or what it may. In all probability injunction would follow an effort to the direction of river improvement and if such an effort were made independent of said corporation the injunction might prove effectual; if made by the corporation it would fall harmless. Thus we have the situation laid out plainly before us. We find that this discarded garment may yet protect our backs from the scourge of injunction. The state's authority invested in this company, united with popular effort, must sweep away all obstacles. Nothing can be done without this consolidation of these two powers; by themselves, in their present state, they are useless. The principal hindrance to the work now, in dimention among them more interested. If the plans of Mr. Gee be adopted at sight, he will do nothing. Another will not give a dollar to assist. The plan is adopted We despair such a state of affairs. What is wanting is a united and sympathetic effort. But we are encouraged. We believe that the sentiment of the people is fast turning into the right channel and the dawn of popular strength will sweep onward to the consummation of the project which is to make Charlevoix the metropolis of Grand Traverse.

MICHIGAN BELL TELEPHONE COMPANY GIVES NEW SERVICE

New Communication Service Made Available On Saturday, November 21st

A new communication service is made available last Saturday by the Michigan Bell Telephone Company, the American Telephone and Telegraph Company and the other Associated Companies in the Bell System.

This new service which is announced by Burch Preseker, president of the Michigan Bell Company, consists in the establishment and operation of central switching exchanges for teletypewriters, machines that type words electrically over wires to a distant teletypewriter. Any subscriber to the service can obtain connection with the teletypewriter of any other subscriber in the universe within the same city or in a distant city and this will permit the immediate transmission of letters, typewritten statements or other information between the two subscribers. In effect, the method used for interconnection of the instruments is the same as that now employed in the telephone system.

The present teletypewriter service of the Bell System is furnished only in connection with private wires which are not connected to central switching points. This private wire service, now widely used for interoffice communication, will be continued as heretofore. The new switching service through teletypewriter exchanges is now possible because of developments in apparatus and operation. These permit intercommunication by teletypewriter on a nationwide basis just as the development of telephone switchboards made possible the interconnection of telephone instruments.

The new teletypewriter service will thus have the flexibility that characterizes the regular telephone service of the Bell Companies. The establishment of switching offices similar to telephone exchanges enables subscribers to the new service to call and secure connections just as they do for local or long distance telephone conversations. While their teletypewriter lines are connected they may send or receive typed messages as desired.

At the beginning of 1931 the Bell System was furnishing 10,500 teletypewriter machines, utilizing 48 per cent of its private line wire mileage in their service.

WOOD WISDOM

If you buy home materials at home and there is anything wrong, you can get hold of the merchant at once and get things adjusted. Not so easy if you are dealing with a stranger at a distance. Worth thinking about. Ask the fellow who has had trouble.

If you know you are right and admit you are wrong—you are married.

Yes, you have heard about the fellow who lit a match to see if his tank was empty and found it wasn't; also the fellow who raised in the crossing to beat the train, but didn't. Did you hear of your neighbor who bought a new roof from a smooth stranger from the big city, thinking it was better than shingle-Hide, and soon found it wasn't? It takes only a little investigation at home to make sure before investing, and it costs nothing to inquire.

A customer demands the last from his local dealer and gets it; has to, charged for six months or more, and if there is a chance, gets an adjustment. The place where he can get six of that is the best place to trade.

Though Mule-Hide roofing is beautiful in the range of colors, the greatest beauty sheets is its dependability. Every bit of it carries a double guarantee. Better let us explain to you what that means. It won't cost you a cent to hear about it.

Two Scotchmen had a bet to be paid by the one who caught the first fish, and one went to fishing without bait, while the other would cast gall in his line when he had a bite.

U. S. MISSIONARY IS CAPTIVE OF CHINESE

Last Reported to Be "Teacher" of Red Army.

Peiping, China.—Evel Noble, Methodist missionary, was reported held captive by Communist troops in the province of Szechwan.

Noble is a native of Mt. Lebanon, Ind., and was graduated from Wabash college, Crawfordsville, Ind., with the class of 1923. He has been in China for seven years.

Last reported seven months ago from Nanking, Noble was said to be a "teacher" of Red army leaders. Nanking dispatches reporting by wire last March asserted that Noble was being held captive by the Communists.

At that time Nanking said Noble had been captured by Red troops within two days' journey from Hankow, and within 30 miles of Hupeh capital, where he was born.

The Noble family has been in China for 30 years. Noble's father, Dr. Lewis Noble, is a missionary stationed at Changsha, capital of Hunan province.

Noble's brother, Dr. Harold Noble, is a missionary in Honan province, China.

Noble is a graduate of Wabash college, Crawfordsville, Indiana, with the class of 1923. He was a member of Phi Gamma Delta fraternity while at that college.

He received special scholarship honors while at college, and was prominent in student activities.

The Noble family has been in China for the past seven years.

The Chinese government has been notified of Noble's capture.

The American consul in Nanking and the consul-general at Hankow were notified shortly after the news was received.

The Chinese government has been asked to take immediate steps to free the missionary.

It is believed that the wealth of Noble's parents will impress communists as worth ransoming. At the time he was captured, some time early in September, the Communists demanded that all Chinese Nationalist troops withdraw from Szechwan province, China, but all of them have since died, been killed or conquered.

Noble was married to Miss Lois Nelson, Wabash co-ed, in 1926. They have two children.

Noble's father, Dr. Lewis Noble, is a missionary to China. He was born in Hupeh province, China, and has spent most of his life in China.

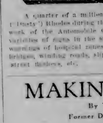
MAKING APOLOGIES

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Former Dean of Men, University of Illinois.



I suppose at one time or another in his life each one of us unnecessarily or accidentally or intentionally or deliberately or in the excess of exuberant animal spirits, rolling rude or unkind remark or indulged in some act or omission which has caused pain to his friends. Most of us were starting to launch that boat, but we did not foresee that side on which we would be dragged into position to make the apology. Now, one's statement is irritated the listener, and he says words to that effect, and I answered, just what I thought. It was the truth which I uttered, but rather than accept my statement another party may brought out to check. I know as surely as I live that a dozen people who heard me say that were standing in front of the fire, but I insisted that side on which I was dragged into position to make the apology, for which I was severely censured by those who did not know the truth. The wisdom of silence then would have been doing me, my worthiness things. It is thought written in the National Geographic.

At this juncture of the year it is appropriate to and about the wonderful gifts which twenty years of patient effort, succeeded in having an annual Thanksgiving celebration in this country observed on the same day by all of the people.

The name of this woman was Mrs. Sarah Josepha Hale. Even those who have never heard of her, have seen her picture in many magazines and newspapers.

For twenty years Mrs. Hale wrote editorials in her magazine, and personally addressed thousands of letters to governors and other officials, pleading for the establishment of a national Thanksgiving day.

In 1863, Thanksgiving was set for December 30, same as the states continued to observe it. Then in 1870 it was changed to November 26, and in 1895 to November 28, same as the states now observe it.

It was her wish, however, that this day should be a day of prayer, and one given to promote a sentiment of thankfulness among the people for their many blessings. It is thought that she was successful in this respect.

Mrs. Hale was born in Newport, N. H., October 24, 1788, and died in Philadelphia, April 30, 1879. She was not a college woman, but was taught by her mother. In 1813, at the age of twenty-five, she married a lawyer, David Hale, a graduate of Dartmouth college, who died at one time a member of congress from New Hampshire. Five years later she was left a widow with five children. She was a creative, old-fashioned housewife, and her efforts were therefore confined to small magazine work and writing. She was a prolific worker. In addition to her duties as an editor, she published a number of books, among them "Northwood," "Sketches of American Character," "Traits of American Life," "Poems for our Children," "Manners," "Women's Record," "Sarah Josepha Hale," and "Godey's Ladies' Book." She continued with the latter publication until 1877.

Much Work Well Done.

Editing a magazine is a big job in itself. Mrs. Hale, however, seemed to find time for many other things. She organized the Seaman's Aid society in Boston, which is the parent of similar organizations now existing in most ports. The common schools of Philadelphia owe their inception to the efforts of this little woman. She persuaded the women of New England to raise $30,000 for that purpose.

The plan of observing women for equal lands was inaugurated by Mrs. Hale. She devised a number of years ago through the organization of the Ladies' Medical Missionary society of Philadelphia, and the Woman's Union Missionary society of America. She was one of the founders of the Bethune Literary society in New York.

Throughout her editorial work Mrs. Hale stood for practical development of women, advocating their employment in occupations for which they were fitted.

Thanksgiving in 1777.

It was in the early forties that Mrs. Hale began her campaign for making Thanksgiving a national holiday and its celebration on the same day all over the country. It was then the common for different ministers to observe the occasion on whatever day happened to strike their fancy.

Following the surrender of Burgoyne at Saratoga in 1777, the Continental congress had appointed a committee to recommend a day for thanks for the signal success lately obtained over the enemies of the United States.

BANKERS DEVELOP NEW FINANCE AID

President of American Bankers Association Describes Plan and Services of National Credit Corporation

NEW YORK.—The National Credit Corporation, a billion dollar cooperative institution to the medical world set up by bankers to put idle resources to work, was described as an effort to offer the central point in President Hoover's plan for breaking the credit, mental and industrial activity of the nation as proposed in his statement at the White House of October 7, Harry J. Haas, president of the American Bankers Association stated in a recent interview.

The corporation is actually organized in character to go back to undo the entire banking system and increase the effectiveness of the business per cent of banks in their membership in good standing as well as the others this year will maintain the banking relations of the country, he explained, by securing a national institution whose funds will be loaned where necessary in times when credit is drawn in the other direction, he said. "So far as our corporation is concerned, in November, in Tuesday, Holidays and February we will be employing at least as many and probably more men than we did in the past year."

In order to gauge the outlook for next years market his corporation, he said, attempts to set up sales in proportion to economic scientific studies in addition to observation and business.

"We are in the habit of looking upon an automobile not merely as an automobile but as transportation," he said. "We figure each automobile produced as six years of transportation. Then by following up records of automobiles we get a figure which indicates what must be in a normal condition of transportation for the needs of the American people, and whether there are more or less miles than ought to be used. According to our figures, there are about twelve million cars now transportation in the country at the present time that has been considered normal since 1922.

The Outlook for Business

"Consequently, if we really the same purchasing power in this country, it is quite evident that on the first appearance of confidence there will start a rush to replace that inventory. In developing this graph, it has come out very clearly that this year there will be a big automobile year. The biggest year in automobiles was 1929 when 4,180,000 cars were produced for American consumption. This year the industry will produce somewhere between 1,- 700,000 and 1,800,000 cars. As 1932 is three years after 1929, it is probable that if cars were normal we could be sure we would do a tremendous business, because the third year in the time when the last big business takes place."

He added that there are factors at work that make it uncertain how the two years will be. "Automobiles are necessary to bring about confidence and with little saving some purchasing power this we need a confidence and with little saving some purchasing power this we need a confidence and with little saving some purchasing power this we need a

Explorers Find Hot Springs in Hidden Valley.

Ottawa.—The explorers who "said that time forgot" to certain far northern, is a region of hot springs prospector's myth or fragments of ancient history.

Such is the positive assurance given by Dr. J. Norman Haney of Ottawa and his companions, who are now homeward bound with the proof definition of many of the true tales that have ever gained about the hidden tropical valley deep within the Arctic circle in northern Ellesmere Island.

ESTATE TAXES DATE BACK TO PHARAOHS

Pennsylvania Official Reveals Old-Time Levees.

Harrisburg.—Inheritance taxes in ancient Egypt were higher than those which the present generation retains, according to Liem Reed, department of revenue officer in charge of collecting the state's levies.

"The Egyptian records of the Seventeenth century before Christ show that there was a transfer inheritance tax for the empire of the Nile, but the rate was 10 per cent," Reed said.

The Pennsylvania rate for wife or husband, parents, sons, daughters, grandchildren and all direct descendants of 5 cents on each dollar. Here is also a rate for the lineal ancestors of the testator, according to the records of the Pharaohs.

Reed learned the history of inheritance taxes from stamps in ancient Egyptian tombs and those of the time of our Saviour.

"In the year 6 A. D. Emperor Augustus permitted his friends, estate to pass a 5 per cent inheritance tax to the empire of the Nile valley. The deductions for funeral expenses, as we do, and reckoned items and the computation of the value of the estate on the basis of unaffiliated income," he said.

"On the death of a vassal in Europe in the Middle ages, the group duty reverted to the king for redemption, and later might be fathed by the heir within a year and a day by payment of a fine.

"But each Pennsylvania law allows a year for the settlement of the estate before the interest penalty of 1 per cent a month is added."

Here looking strangely out of place among the gondolas and other craft in the Grand canal, Venice is the DO-X II, the first of two flying boats bought from the Dornier works of Germany by the Italian government. THE SIMPLE LIFE

He has just bought a new motor car, high powered, easy riding, staple, to operate, and he is refusing me to do the same thing. The price is high now, he assures me, which automatically makes the prospect more attaching. He tells me about a wonderful trip he had last summer, and then he drifts to the complicated character of life as we

I don't think he would greatly enjoy the simple life. He has been reading several books on it, and he has come in some of the South Sea Islands. The simple life is all right, he says, for a while in winter, but in summer the whiteness of the people wearing the skins of the animals is too much for human taste and pleasure.

Stock Must Have Plenty of Water

Supply Should Be Warmed in Cold Weather to Produce Gains.

Thirsty stock do not get fat, while dairy cows require four pounds or more of water for every pound of milk which they produce. Where the drinking water is dumped with a tank heater, there seem and some cases fitted pre-duction will result during the colder months, says the Missouri Farmer. There is also a saving in feed, for when large quantities of cold water are consumed at one time considerable heat is required to bring this up to body temperature. Nearly every one has seen dairy cows lining up their backs and shiver on a cold day after drinking ice water from a stock tank and it is safe to be reported that such an experience is conducive to profitable production. One member of a dairy herd improvement association found that his cows made on average a gain of 2-0 pounds of butterfat a month following the purchase of a heater. At the town experiment station it was found that tall pigs given water from an automatic water bowl kept from freezing with a kerosene lamp, showed an increase in profit of 17 per cent as compared to pigs given water in open troughs. Gains were increased by 5 per cent and feed requirements were reduced 10 per cent, due to water being available at all times. Stock tanks should be banked and covered during the winter and it is also recommended that straws or shelters be placed around both the tanks and waterers to prevent accidents due to slippery ice by users.

Modern Farm Machinery Calls for Large Fields

Loss of time and labor often results when fields are small and cut up by unnecessary borders. Where in-crease cultivation, the replacing of row crops, or timber cutting are taking the place of horse-drawn equipment, as in the case of many farms, it will be found that they cannot secure greatest efficiency from their new equipment if fields are smaller and more irregular than is necessary.

J. F. Hosier, rural economist at the Penn state agricultural station, finds that many farms could be greatly improved by the removal of unnecessary fences. Modern farm machinery and motor trucks require long, straight runs and possible savings in labor and other operating costs. A typical case might be 20 farms where the removal of 20 fences would allow 1.7 acres with a 1-block plow to fields of less than six acres. The saving in labor alone amounts to about

ANYWAY IT IS NOT OUR BATTLE

The one thing more certain than almost any other thing is that about 999 out of every 1,000 Americans believe the United States has no business to interfere actively in any way between Japan and China in the present controversy except in use its good offices to maintain the peace between the belligerents. The one man in the thousand who may think otherwise is the adventurer who may wish to get into the scrap, or perhaps he is one of those who believes that a jolly little war will restore prosperity to business in America.

In the first place few Americans actually know the rights and the wrongs of the case. We are sympathetic with China, perhaps, as we are always sympathetic with the under dog, and we are inclined to believe Japan is imperialistic and we dislike imperialism, but sometimes the under dog deserves to be the under dog and sometimes an imperialistic policy on the part of a nation is necessary for its own self preservation.

After all, China has made a pretty bad mess of her own national life. Her people have spent most of the last 20 or 30 years fighting one another. That does not mean that Japan should take advantage of this situation to crush China, of course, but the feeble position of the various Chinese governments has been so well understood by the great powers that for many years they have attempted by the invocation of their so-called extra-territorial rights to dominate her national government.

We are informed that China is rising to a new conception of integrated nationalism and that is hopeful if true, but she has not, as yet, demonstrated her ability to govern herself. Still she has the right to misgovern herself if she cannot do otherwise.

But be that as it may, the other powers naturally resent any attempt on the part of Japan to gain dominance of China. The white races know instinctively that if the yellow races were to be allied under the leadership of Japan, the supposed racial superiority of the whites would be endangered. Supposing that through the alchemy of war or by any other means Japan with her 60,000,000 should unite with China's 400,000,000 people, such union would constitute a serious menace to the white races of the world.

These things are things that are in the background of world politics, just now. They are not discussed by the diplomats—will not be discussed by them, just whispered.

But so far as the United States is concerned this conflict is between two Asiatic powers and that is all. Our interests are not directly involved and short of some actual attack upon us, cannot well be involved. If President Hoover can reconcile the belligerents, that is well and all his countrymen will approve, but we will place ourselves in peril by adopting any course that could be construed as meddlesome. This is a conflict between two nations of a race, not between races. And our nation except for the dollars its citizens may have invested in China or Japan, has no immediate concern in the outcome of the present difficulty.

The League of Nations, in which so happily the United States is without membership, is empowered to invoke a boycott or even to use its armed forces against a nation that it considers to be the aggressor in a war, but this country is not bound by any such agreement and, it may be safely said, certain of the powers that are members of the League would find it convenient not to use the boycott and armed forces in this situation if the United States were to sit apart.

The United States has big problems of its own to solve and has not as yet arrived at their solution. Our part in the war in the Orient should be limited to doing everything we can to induce the belligerents to lay down their arms; but if they insist upon fighting, then it is not our battle.

SAVING OUR COUNTRY FROM TAXES

Tax reduction must be accomplished.

No other problem, except employment, so vitally affects every citizen. It strikes rich and poor alike, the small business and the large one. It is directly related to the business depression in that it discourages industrial activity and investment of capital. High taxes are the great enemy of progress of all kinds.

Leading foreign nations of the world are staggering under intolerable tax burdens. That fact alone is a powerful argument to fix and keep this government from being submerged by a similar burden of public debt. If we are to remain the economic leader of the world we must have a government that is run efficiently and at the lowest possible cost. Otherwise, we will sink to the common level of other debt-ridden nations.

It is trite, but true, to say that there is but one way to lower taxes—for government to spend less money. The creation of new forms of taxation, of special or class taxes, solves nothing. It should be the duty of government, local, state and national, to aid the general economic recovery by adopting stringent economies and tax reduction programs.

The trouble with China is lack of national spirit. And yet there are a lot of pacifists in America who would like to destroy the national spirit in this country.

Smith, Jackson Ingalls, William Nelson, L. W. Skinner, O. D. Hilton and George Kyes. We take the following concerning one of this number from the Boyne Citizen: "On Tuesday evening last an event took place in this village of the greatest interest among the Masonic fraternity. It was the occasion of Boyne City Lodge, No. 361, F. & A. M., paying tribute to their oldest brother, George Keyes, of this village, who has graced the honored rolls of Masonry by a membership extending over a period of more than half a century. The brothers from Boyne City and vicinity, accompanied by their ladies, arrived by special train from that place at 7:30 p. m., and were escorted to the Mears Hall, where a reception was held, and a handsome upholstered arm chair of the modern type was presented to the venerable brother as a token of the high esteem in which the veteran Mason is held by the brethren. Worshipful Master, Willis Hurd, of Boyne City, presided. Brother Wm. Mears made a presentation speech in feeling remarks. Incidentally remarking that Boyne Falls was proud to boast of the oldest Mason in the county, as well as one of the few remaining veterans of the Mexican war, in which Mr. Kyes served two years. Worshipful Master Hurd expressed the appreciation of Brother Kyes loyalty, who though 82 years of age, still often walked to Boyne City to attend lodge, returning in the same way after lodge.

The Charlevoix Life Saving Station was closed at midnight Saturday. On the afternoon of that day Capt. Fountain and his men distinguished themselves by a rescue that adds to the distinguished history of that service. About three o'clock the look-out in the tower, by the aid of a glass, saw a vessel about ten miles out flying a flag union down. After getting word to a tug to follow him, Capt. Fountain ordered the life-boat launched, and out through a big south wave they went, followed by the tug, which soon took the boat in tow. It was found to be the small schooner Nellie Johnson, which left here that afternoon for St. James. The vessel had sprung a leak, and the crew were gaining on the pumps so that she was settling by the bow. The life-savers manned the pump, and the tug brought the whole outfit into port. But for the life-saving crew, the boat would surely have been foundered. She was loaded with meal, peas and general winter supplies. About fifty bushels of the peas got wet, caps. Johnson says, dropped the load and again proceeded on his voyage.

It is the duty of all men, who desire custom trade and patronage for themselves and for our village, not only to patronize the local paper by way of advertisements, but to extend their circulation and to give them the preference in other things.

Our pets, the propellers Fountain City and Idaho, have gone down to lay up and we shall not again behold the jovial faces of our friends, Captains Gibson and Penny until the opening of another season. The Fountain City wooded here thirty-four times during the season, and the Idaho has not fallen much short. These commanders are gentlemen in the true sense of the term. We hope to see them again in the same positions which will doubtless be the case. Another eminently popular boat of the same line is the Mohawk, commanded by Capt. E. WOOD WISDOM

If you buy home materials at home and there is anything wrong you can get hold of the merchant at once and get things adjusted. Not so easy if you are dealing with a stranger at a distance. Worth thinking about. Ask the fellow who has had trouble.

If you know you are right and admit you are wrong—you are married.

Yes, you have heard about the fellow who bit a hunk off an ice car, as if his tank was empty and found it wasn't, also the fellow who raced to the crossing to beat the train, but, didn't. Did you hear of your neighbor who bought a sage roof from a smooth stranger from the big city, thinking it was better than Mule-Hide, and soon found to his grief that it wasn't? It takes only a little investigation at home to make sure before investing, and it costs nothing to inquire.

A customer demands the best from his local dealer and gets it, has it charged for six months or so—and if there is a chance, gets an adjustment. To your dealer he can get all of that is the best place to trade.

Mule-Hide roofing is beautiful in its range of colors, the greatest beauty is shown in its dependability. Every bit of it carries a double guarantee. Better let us explain to you what that means. It won't cost you a cent to hear about it.

In Two Rivers there had a lot to be paid by the one who bought the first fish, and one went to fishing without bait, while the other would not pull in his line when no bad a bite.

As a rule, milk is about the best food for children, but there are times when they are much better off without it. It should always be left off when children are suffering from vomiting, fretful or crying spells, by bad breath, coated tongue, sallow skin, indigestion, biliousness, etc., that their stomach and bowels are out of order.

In such like this, California Fig Syrup does the work. It tones, regulates the stomach and bowels and gives them extra help and strength so they continue to act correctly of their own accord. California Fig Syrup is not a purely vegetable and harmless...even for babies.

Millions of mothers keep prompt to direct and effectively use it as a means of gentle but unfailing help. A Woman Doctor, Mrs. Mary Swaney, Monument, Kansas, writes: "My little girl, baby's tendency to constipation was so serious as to merit I began giving her California Fig Syrup. I stopped her regular way and soon her stomach and bowels were acting perfectly. Since then I've never had to have any advice about her bowels. I have also used California Fig Syrup with my little boy with equal success."

To be sure of getting the genuine, which physicians endorse, always ask for California Fig Syrup by the full name.

Taking vinegar cures the first form of a cure as a remedy for diabetes is often a commonplace, and among cod Australia. Now someone has decided to find out the actual remedial value of the plan.

He shrugged. "That yellow dazzle of waves will sink me, for it is on your bloodline to all that society."

He picked up a stone and buried it into the fallow of a nearby tree, and half a dozen others remembering one huge green wasp thudded in the ground. He rubbed one under the brow ache of a grandpa tear. I shook my hand and he went on: "If Caracas is your goal I might tell you that, in the humble house of Senor Don Carlos Cervera, which lies less than two hundred metres south of San Jacinto plaza, you will find safe lodgment, and in the Casilda Merida, presided over by the faithful Carlotta, a few pairces sometimes gather. I am sure that when you have had further opportunity to study the methods of Spain in Venezuela you will come to us, though you will need a vast amount of work to get into Caracas and safely out again."

"And those few patriots who sometimes gather in the message of thy friend—how shall I know them?"

He extended his right hand, third finger folded into the palm. "That, in shining needs, is the sign used by members of the Sociedad Patriotica, an organization founded by Simon Bolivar and Miranda nearly ten years ago."

He pressed my hand in a warm firm grip. "I think I shall not see you again. Too many forces are against you."

But he erred, for I was destined to fight side by side with captain Monteleon through a bitter campaign against the Spanish. I was yet to meet the moving spirits of that famous and unsettled British legion, which did so much to win from Ferdinand VII its independence for Venezuela and half of South America as well; hardy souls veterans some of them of the Napoleonic wars, who, after the fall of the Corsican, could see go back to the peaceful pursuits of ruin, but, clutched to the chariot of Mars, must needs follow the lure of the sword.

As I set out that morning on the road to Caracas, and on the road to independence beyond my wildest dreams, the first thing that I did was to be startled by a shout. THE STORY

At eighteen, in the city of New Orleans, in 1811, Lorne Gaillo, illegitimate son of an officer under Napoleon, is surprised as the supervisors of their figures in secret and treasonable conference. He and his young friend, whom Lorne rescues from the clutches of the police, are the sons of the leaders of the Gaillo family, a band with men and women of all ages and walks of life, who are plotting to free Venezuela from the Spanish yoke. Lorne is employed by Aaron Burr, who is also interested in the plot, and is sent to Caracas to contact Simon Bolivar, leader of the revolutionists. Lorne's friend, Pierre, is left behind to carry on the work of the organization in New Orleans. Lorne is given a letter of introduction to Bolivar by Burr, and sails for Caracas. He is shipwrecked on the coast of Yucatan, and is rescued by Indians. He is captured by Spanish soldiers, but escapes and reaches Caracas. There he is befriended by Carlos Cervera, a wealthy merchant, and his daughter Isidra. Lorne is introduced to Bolivar, and is given a commission in the army. He is sent to Valencia to recruit troops, and there he meets Carlotta Monteleon, a beautiful girl who is betrothed to Don Fernando Miranda, a Spanish officer. Lorne and Carlotta fall in love, but Carlotta's father, Don Miguel Monteleon, forces her to marry Miranda. Lorne is ordered to Caracas, and Carlotta, realizing that she loves Lorne, refuses to marry Miranda. Lorne and Carlotta are married, but Miranda, who has been wounded in battle, kidnaps Carlotta. Lorne, with a band of men, pursues Miranda and rescues Carlotta. Lorne is then ordered to Angostura, where he is to meet Bolivar. He is captured by Spanish troops, but escapes and reaches Angostura. Bolivar tells him that he is to be sent to Haiti to get arms and ammunition. Lorne is ordered to Port au Prince, Haiti, to meet Petion, president of Haiti. Petion refuses to help Bolivar unless he promises to free the slaves. Lorne returns to Angostura and tells Bolivar of Petion's terms. Bolivar promises to free the slaves. Lorne is then sent to Jamaica to get arms and ammunition. He is captured by Spanish soldiers, but escapes and reaches Jamaica. There he meets Bolivar, who has been driven from Venezuela by the Spanish. Lorne is then sent to Haiti to get arms and ammunition. He is captured by Spanish soldiers, but escapes and reaches Haiti. MIAMI BEACH FLORIDA

The road I first taken led to the Plaza San Jacinto, where I turned south and asked my way to the home of Senor Carmano, which proved to be a tall and brown, rock and adobe structure of considerable size.

Senora was non-committal; his dark eyes surveyed me with grave concern, and after assuring himself of my "arrangements" he answered somewhat fully but with unmistakable firmness that he had no quarters this night he offered to travelers. Expressing my disappointment in halting Spanish, I offered my hand in parting salute. As he grasped it vaguely noticed that I folded my third finger into the palm.

He gasped. His swarthy face went an ashen gray, and his sharp eyes searched my face. His turned my hand and studied it.

"There is a comfortable room for two, Senior, and food. A chile, lately baked, frijoles, pulse-brown tortillas, the sauce of peppers, fruit—luscious peaches from my own garden, oranges and melons from Coro, wine from Madeira and rum from Cumana and a house of safety, Senor. If there is anything you might require—"

"The very kind, 7-mat," I said.

A dozen Indians interpreters sat at tables or lounged against the bar as I entered and made my way toward Carlos, who stood behind the bar.

He smiled at me with the enigmatic smile of a man who anticipates a sale. I gave the subject of my order careful thought. I did not dare to ask for Asserbian whisky and wine was still considered a European drink. While I pondered then a familiar voice came to me: "There is to rum in all the world, Senor, this rum from Jamaica."

"I'll take some Cumana Rum," I said to Carlos, as another voice agreed with the connoisseur of rum. The second voice, whose back was turned to me, turned at the sound of my voice, and suddenly the map of romance between the bar and his face.

He opened a wide mouth that still showed traces of his former white teeth and set out a great laugh that fairly rattled the windows. "Senor Lorne," he cried, "the son his grave up its dead!"

I stared, aghast, for Manuel stood before me; Manuel, who twice had escaped my net with parts of his fists, and who could, therefore, have had no love for me. My thoughts were racing wildly. Manuel reimaged to Bolivar yet the Spanish Captain Alvarez, according to the Senorita Isidra, had called him a good sailor and Isidra had said he was stupid. Some of it—if. And here was Manuel in ragged clothing and visiting lowly in a saloon less than a square from the plaza. True in the city, we encountered enough to warn everything along the lines in the safe city of New Orleans.

"Are you not mistaken, Senor?" I ventured. "Is there anything about me that should make you call me name?"

Now he went off into another convulsion of merriment. "Did the sea water dim thy whiskers," he roared, "and the yellow thatch of thine? Speak up, Senor Lorn; and tell us how you came here—and why."

I had made an unprofitable entry into the atmosphere of spies; I had failed ere I had begun, and I had fallen into a grotesque twist of fate—because of the misplaced enmity of those who should have been my friends. Ah, well . . . I could, at least, show them the American indifference toward death.

"I'm Manuel," I said "no! Manuel, the sailor, who threw me like the flavor of my fist." I smiled, extending my hand.

He, too, found my third finger folded into the palm. His map of ruin shattered on the floor, the grin disappeared from his face, and the evil light that had been in his eyes faded; he threw in a harsh, hissing breath and spat out a Spanish oath.

"Manuel," I cried, "has this fine treasonous man touched your brain, or do you merely jest with a poor French sailor stranded at La Guaira, and seeking employment in Caracas?"

Manuel's left eyelid dropped, and raised quickly again, and his face was black. "I think I should offer answers to you, Senor; I must have been in error, for you cannot be the Senor Lorne of whom I left from the deck of the Santa Lucrecia. No man could have lived in that raging sea. Yet I have seen you somewhere, or perhaps the rum has put a fancy in my head."

Diary Shows Washington as Successful Hunter

Most people are under the impression that George Washington's hunting experiences were confined to those in the vicinity of his home in Virginia, but he met the men. In the autumn of 1770 he hunting buffalo shifted on his trip to the Ohio with his friend, Doctor Craik, according to the diary of information and publication of the George Washington treasonable communication. In his diary of November 2 of that year he found this interesting item on buffalo hunting:

"We proceeded up the River Kanawha with the canoe about four miles and then leaving our canoe went a hunting. Killed five buffaloes and wounded some others, three deer, etc. This country abounds in buffalo and will game of all kinds as also in all kinds of wild fowl, there being in the business a great many small grassy plains or tracts which are full of grass, clover and divers of different kinds."

It will be observed that Washington modestly refrains from stating how many of the five buffaloes fell from bullets from his rifle.

The elder man nodded.

"Rather," he replied, "especially when I'm telling the truth."

"Went a hunting with the above gentlemen. Found both a boar and a fox, but got neither."

Crowded China

The area of the whole territory of the republic of China is 4,277,000 square miles, with a population of 436,000,000, giving the population per square mile about 95. However, this is hardly an indication of the great density of population in some parts of China proper. For instance, the province of Kiangsu, with 35,510,000 people in an area of 39,000 square miles, has a density of 924 persons to a square mile and is the most densely populated province in the world. Japan with an area of 148,756 square miles and a population of approximately 62,910,000 has a density of population of 423 persons per square mile.

Souvenirs of the Past

Relics of early days on the Niagara frontier have been found by workmen excavating the old walls of Fort Niagara. Among them are the butt of an old French cannon, a pre-Iroquois flint-fabrication arrowhead, a large quantity of various-size shot, a metal button, and a 1767 penny. An English dictionary, thought to have been printed about 1800 and to have been the property of a British soldier quartered in the fort after the Americans lost it in the War of 1812, was found on one of the many posts supporting the roof of the south blockhouse.

WEAK MIND NOT A FACTOR IN CRIME

Fallacy of Old Belief Has Been Proved.

Intelligence comparisons conducted by Dr. L. P. Ashley, professor of psychology at the Cleland Teachers college, Minnesota, and affecting prisoners in state institutions and law-abiding citizens, blasted the popular theory that feeble-mindedness is a major factor in crime. He compared intelligence tests of 42,000 criminals with those of 30,000 members of the United States draft army.

Only 3.5 per cent of the prisoners who took the tests, according to Doctor Ashley, appeared to be feeble minded. This left 96.5 per cent of the criminals mentally able to get from themselves to their work and economic environments. It followed, therefore, that about 96 per cent of the crime committed in this country is directly due to other factors than feeble-mindedness.

In recent years it has become a popular belief that about 52 per cent of offenders are feeble-minded and not block better than—or equal to—criminals, said Dorothy Zellen. Mentally it also was the popular belief that only about 2 per cent of the rest of the population are of inferior intelligence. As a matter of fact there is little difference between criminal and law-abiding people when it comes to intelligence.

There are some persons who insist on excusing all criminals from responsibility on the ground that some of them know little else to follow the careers of wrong-doing. The remaining share with the assumption that no individual would do wrong if he knew what was right. It is true that the difference between right and wrong is still also intelligence and moral response to environment that would include the whole population of any country.

If one considers some of the arch criminals in recent years one might readily agree with Dorothy Zellen. Take, for example, Al Capone. If one called him feeble-minded and the gangster confronts hazed about it, some one would be put on the spot Capone's intelligence test no doubt would compare favorably with that of many successful business men. He has wonderful powers of organization. He is a good executive. He is a dominant personality. His interests, highly developed, are employed in the wrong direction unless society, but not because of feeble mindedness. It were high time to get rid of this fallacy and go after crime with a clear, strong view.

Grain Went Wrong Way

Simon v. Gerver succeeded a large holding at Minturn, Wis., to some farmers similar land. Thinking more profitable to engage in dairy, Gerver planted to alfalfa. Other farmers, Mathews, planted grain because of grain into legumes, and nothing grew on on the federal project. Experimenting was somewhat. Some put in potatoes, some grain, some sweet clover, some grass seed, farmer went all the road. There out of a thousand operated the farmers, and the wind scattered it after. A movement had started the grasses grown into the wrong page.

Plaque on Historic Spot

A bronze plaque marking the spot where gold was first discovered in Silver Bow county, Montana, recently was dedicated by the Butte chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution. The plaque, which was mounted on a granite pyramid boulder, marked the spot where E. H. Harker and companions panned the first gold from Silver Bow creek in 1864. The boy is Jacques Dingley and Silver Bow.

Large-Hearted Fish

A catfish weighing about nine pounds was caught in the Big Sioux river at Clifford King, of Dell City, Texas, and settled into the fish's stomach to it. After raising a few times the fish swam back to the channel and returned to a few moments into four others. They partook of the potluck, were time they came to follow the rivers of stranglehold. The remaining starts with the assumption that no individual would do wrong if he knew what was right. It is true that the difference between right and wrong is still also intelligence and moral response to environment that would include the whole population of any country.

If one considers some of the arch criminals in recent years one might readily agree with Dorothy Zellen. Take, for example, Al Capone. BETTER HEALTH FOR ALL MICHIGAN IS THE GOAL

With better health for all Michigan as their goal, millions of tiny coaches, each drawn by a quartet of diminutive horses, will journey across Michigan between Thanksgiving Day and Christmas Day, December 25th.

The tiny horses and coaches are part of the all-time coaching scene on the 1931 tuberculosis Christmas seals which will be sent out this week by the Michigan Tuberculosis Association and affiliated local societies. The seal design also includes a cheery "Christmas Greetings" and the double-barred cross, emblem of the anti-tuberculosis movement.

Christmas seals provide tuberculosis protection and prevention for the communities in which they are bought. Among the health services financed from the sale of seals are clinics to discover active cases of tuberculosis, nurses for special tuberculosis work, education in the prevention, symptoms and treatment of tuberculosis, and activities for betterment of child health.

AMERICA'S WORLD RESPONSIBILITIES

By H. J. HAAS

President American Bankers Association

WE are in a changing world, with changing ideas and changing policies which we have no precedents, and we are in a changing world. We are in a world's Second Empire and we must accept the responsibility which goes with it.

It is the link to the future with citizenship. Every one has experienced a time when they have perhaps for a great way but we could never overcome it. And time is the great healer and eventually we have more or less of it. It is with individuals, so it is with nations. Our nation has reached across to the 152 years of its existence. In that time, we have passed through the entire depressions of 1837-1843-1873-1878-1884-1893-1896-1907-1914-1921 and the present.

It is useless to state that in each of these periods there were those who felt that the end before just as we have them today, but what happened after each depression? Our country grew and prospered, and stronger than ever. Its people were interested in the things they never dreamed of, until today, notwithstanding our depression we live on the highest plane of any nation in the world. Indeed we are not justge the future by past experience.

Surely our people are better prepared financially and intellectually to cope with any greater problems that can be brought to the past, as why not look to the future confident that our national spirit and determination will be advanced satisfactorily?

Confidence is not established by a nation's fund nor by an automobile's engine. If we can get confidence started on its way, endowing a little here and there, it will accelerate its speed as it goes. It is time to put the word "can" into make to perform but in the concentrated effort of each and every one of us. Whist we are in the future is one the result of what we have done in the past. We are the result of what we have done in the past. We are the result of what we have done for all time. The future is in the hands of God. Let us, knowing to do its part. Individual and efforts may not count for much but their sum part of the whole and taken in the aggregate amount to the sum total of all endeavors.

PUBLIC INJURED BY BANK GOSSIP

National Association Declares Community Interests Demand Protection Against Idle Rumors

BOTH in their advertising and in their direct contacts with customers and clients, bankers should consistently and persistently devote more time and thought to keeping people mindful of the fact that while the bank has many obligations toward its customers, equally is it true that the depositor also has certain obligations to the bank to enable it to properly serve him in prudent and economical manner, a recent statement of the Savings Bankers Association de Clares.

"A bank community is a semi-public institution and does in a measure of obligation resting upon both the banker and the customers to maintain the effective functioning of that institution that is superior to the personal interests of either," it says.

Bankers might well consciously devote greater effort to building up the confidence of the public in those institutions that due to their public obligations and burden of public interest, the banks are entitled to protection against ill-informed or malicious rumor and gossip," the statement says.

"As to banks in some states, banks under laws afford this protection," it points out, "we recommend that this protection be availed of by definite action wherever practical both as a matter of immediate expediency and as a means to public opinion as to the dangers of idle gossip about a community's banking institutions."

What Can Be Done

Farmers and other communities of any false hope of outside aid from legislation. The only recourse left for the producer to restore price level is to produce his goods at reduced costs, and nearly every farmer can make just one to a few economies in production. Farmers must produce as largely as possible the materials they use, and get away from cash purchases until prices come down proportionately to the things they buy. The cheapest way in the farming business is to raise your own feed and not let the other man get it.

SOCIAL MEET AT LEGION HOME

Delegates Report on Busy City Convention; Prospects Of State Meet Here in 1933

The first social meeting night of Leslie T. Shapton Post No. 226, American Legion featured to be a great success. These social good times are to alternate with the business meetings during the month and will probably prove very acceptable, as "all work and no play makes Jack a dull boy" and the Legionnaires have certainly worked hard since their reorganization in the spring.

Tuesday night, business was dispensed with, outside of the reading of the minutes of the previous meeting and them the members were privileged to enjoy the very excellent singing of the high school male quartet with Miss Marjorie Carey as accompanist, Ralph Newman also entertained the company with his harmonica playing and a comical musical monologue adapted from The Arkansas Traveler, after which coffee and fried cakes were served.

Next Monday night comes the tripoint county meeting at Boyne City, which will be of a semi-social nature. It is desired to have as large an attendance as possible. The bugle and drum corps practice date will be shifted to accommodate this engagement on that evening.

The three delegates to the Mid-Winter Post Officers state conference of the American Legion held in City restaurant Sunday afternoon and Commander Allard, as spokesman, reported on Tuesday night's meeting that the invitation extended to the conference, composed of commanders, adjutants and welfare officers from all parts of the state, to hold the 1933 state convention of the American Legion at Charlevoix in September met with general favor. The prospects look excellent for Charlevoix getting the convention, as the other parts of the Northern Michigan District are willing to let it come here and it will be due in this part of the state in 1933, as the privilege to hold the convention twice in succession in the south and twice in the north. It was held at Petoskey this year and will convene at Kalkaska in 1932.

The convention is a three day affair and will bring upwards of 6,000 Legionnaires and Auxiliary members to Charlevoix. The state department of the Legion allows the local post a certain sum of money to defray the expense of the convention.

Officers and members of Leslie T. Shapton Post are arguing that the Post shall take an active part in the Kalamazoo convention, next Labor Day week. It is hoped by that time to have the bugle and drum corps, the members of which are practicing arduously this winter, properly uniformed and that Charlevoix can have a float in the parade, so as to make a good showing. The place of the 1933 convention will be decided at Kalamazoo.

Farmers of the district who have wood, or wood-lots or swamp land where wood may be cut, and who care to donate the wood to the Legion for the relief of the fuelless unemployed of the community, are asked to communicate with Commander Lee Allard, Adjutant F. V. Tyler or Welfare Officer Clarence Meggison. The Legionnaires will agree to cut the wood themselves, on shares or in any other way the owner may elect. One plan proposed is to truck or sport the men whose families need the fuel to the spot and let them do their own cutting. An endeavor will be made to arrange with the city or county for the use of a truck to haul in the wood.

SNAPPY WINTER WEATHER OUT OF THE NORTHWEST

Something of a blizzard came out of the northwest Saturday night and raged in this section throughout Sunday and part of Monday. A small amount of snow accompanied the blizzard, while for several hours the wind was of exceptional velocity. Thermometers registered around 13 degrees above which, taken in connection with heavy northerly wind, made for snappy winter weather.

REGULAR MEETING P.T.A. ASSOCIATION

Outline Of Tentative Plans For Entertainment Given By Superintendent Dunn

The regular monthly meeting of the Parent Teacher's Association was held in the assembly room of the High School building Wednesday evening.

The meeting was called to order by President Archie Livingston and after a period of group singing the minutes of the last meeting were read and approved.

The report of the committee on hot lunches was given by Rev. G. Russell Parker and expressed the opinion that the committee as in favor of the Association sponsoring this project. No definite plans were submitted as it was intimated by Rev. Parker that there would be something doing in the near future for the purpose of raising funds to finance this proposition.

Superintendent Bush supplemented this report by pointing out that the Association and parents especially must show interest in this matter in order to get any satisfactory results.

The subject for discussion of the evening was "Adult Education," in this matter Superintendent Bush presented to the Association something new as to Charlevoix and really worthwhile for the adults of this community.

A tentative outline was given of an Extension Service sponsored by the faculty of the local schools at no cost to the public but an interest sufficient to make this service worthwhile.

The plans are in a formative stage but it is understood that class periods at specified hours one or twice a week would take up such subjects as Drama, Art, Literature, Music, History, Economic Conditions, Rumia or any other subject that can be handled by members of the faculty and for which there is shown interest enough to form a class.

This plan as outlined shows a spirit of interest and cooperation by the school faculty that is deserving of a like spirit and listened by the citizens of this community.

It is planned to begin this service sometime in January and continue for a period of four to six weeks, as interest shown may warrant.

Further details will be published as soon as available.

LOUIS SHARROW ELECTROCUTED

SHOCK OF 2300 VOLTS CAUSES INSTANT DEATH

Two Others Injured At Same Time; Life Long Resident Of This Community

Death came instantly to Louis Sharrow about 7 o'clock p. m. Wednesday when he was handling a guywire in the yard at his home, the wire coming in contact with a high tension wire carrying 2300 volts which runs along Garfield avenue and on the north side of the Sharrow residence property, which has an east frontage on Sheridan Street.

Dr. R. B. Armstrong and F. P. McMillan were called to the scene of the tragedy, but could do nothing to restore the victim to life.

A large number of local citizens were attracted to the scene of the accident soon after it happened.

Mr. Sharrow was being assisted by his son John and a neighbor boy, Gordon Raby, both of whom were shocked by the electric current; that caused his death. Neither of the boys were seriously injured by the shock sustained, both being able to attend to their regular duties immediately following the accident.

Mr. Sharrow was born December 18, 1879, therefore fifty-two years old and a life long resident of Charlevoix. He has been employed by the Gaidelli Construction company for some years past.

Other survivors are his wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Sharrow, brothers Bert of Charlevoix and Antoine Sharrow, the latter of Traverse City.

Athletics Contribution to School Life

There is nothing in life that exposes the true character of a person more accurately than an athletic contest. If the winning of a tournament depends on the honesty of a single play, from one of its contestants, if he does the fair thing though he knows it costs his team a victory, is there anything that so vividly portrays the kind of "stuff" that boy or girl possesses?

The very spirit of contest is alone beneficial. When competition is involved, one strives to surpass the accomplishments of the other. So it is in school, through class, wholesome school sports each boy and girl who takes part in athletics is daily pulling forth his best. But this condition exists not only in the gymnasium and football field, it carries over to the class rooms where there is the ever striving for higher grades, for the marks that make it possible for an athlete to play on the school team.

Junior Play Thursday

On Thursday evening of this week, at eight o'clock, the curtain will rise on "The Enemy", written by Channing Pollock, one of the greatest playwrights of modern times.

An overture of the same name written especially for this drama, will be played under the direction of Mr. Rider.

Chemistry

Last week and the fore part of this week the Senior Chemistry class spent in conducting experiments in the laboratory. Most of the experiments have been carried on in the fields of acids, bases and salts.

English

The Senior English classes have been studying the English authorities Milton, Dryden, Addison, Steele and Pope. Perhaps right now, while we have to learn their lives and works, we do not appreciate and enjoy them properly, but they tell us "teacher knows best" so maybe sometime we will be glad to have had them.

The Sophomore English classes have been studying the construction of various kinds of poetry. Members of the class have been writing themes on this subject and may later try their hand at writing some of the poetry. This promises to be very interesting and we should not be surprised to discover some future Poe or Wordsworth in our midst.

History

The weekly news graphs have been put on display this past week. In the American History class of thirty students Drew Young takes first place with a score of 39 out of a possible 50. In the same class Marion Tyler took second place and Virginia Nickerson third.

GROUP CONVENTION ENJOYED LAST FRIDAY

Women from Petoskey furnished the entire programme—except the worship service by Mrs. W. W. Hurd —at the Group Convention for Home Missions at the local Methodist church last Friday. Mrs. W. S. Van Avery, District Corresponding Secretary, gave a very fine report of the great National Convention recently held in Minneapolis, while Mrs. Mayfill covered the winning programme of the Conference Convention in Cadillac. She gave much material in detail, which was very interesting.

Mrs. Wyman gave a very practical talk on the materials and supplies available for the work of the society, of a southern town. Scarrying from all smarters come packantosses and white children followed by their fathers and mothers, to find line hand only a bi-piece affair which has come to town with the circus.

It is a hot summer night in New York City. The conductor steps out from his white-coated band, the shining instruments are poised, ready to swing into a burst of harmony, the audience is hushed. Then, lirrnking in the world's richest musical treasures, thousands of people forget the dirt and noise of the city, forget offices and factories, forget the problems of a complicated civilization and the loneliness of the city, and become neighbors, united by a common interest in a great art.

It is almost Christmas—school organizations have been busy giving plays, assembly programs and the appointing of committees for that and the other. The school band has also been busy.

Their work means a concert for Charlevoix citizens on Thursday evening, December 17th, at 8:00 p. m. There will be an opportunity for the children, boys and girls, mothers and fathers, to hear Charlevoix's School Band in a musical program filled with melody, harmony and rhythm. There will be no admission charge.

LINDA WATKINS SUDDEN CLIMB TO SCREEN HEIGHTS

Blonde Star In "Good Sport" Scored Tremendous Success In Her First Picture.

Just about six months ago, Linda Watkins, blonde screen star, who plays the leading feminine role in "Good Sport," opening Wednesday, Thursday at the Palace Theatre, arrived in Hollywood, and upon knocking at the door of the Fox Studio found herself in as tough a spot as any actress has ever been in.

She was instantly cast in the title role of "Bob Sister" and upon reporting for the first rehearsal discovered that she was to play opposite James Dunn. Dunn had just finished his first picture, "Bad Girl" and rave reviews of his sensational performance were pouring into the film magazines. The mere thought of playing opposite such a popular celebrity as Dunn would have given an ordinary screen pulchritudes of the heart, and have caused her to falter and stutter at all.

But Linda Watkins was no ordinary actress. Although unknown to screen audiences and executives at the time she was a star in her own right on Broadway. And she was determined to become just as popular in the movies as she had become on the stage. She decided that if Dunn could rise to the heights in one picture she could do likewise. And that is exactly what she has done, proven by the laudable receptions "Bob Sister" received wherever it played.

In "Good Sport", Miss Watkins again plays opposite a popular and talented screen star, Mr. John Boles. She steals the part of a young and trusting wife, who when she discovers that her husband has left her for another woman, determines to find out why. And it is the many things she discovers that are said to make "Good Sport" a highly entertaining piece of film drama.

In addition to Miss Watkins and Boles the cast includes some of the screen's prominent celebrities, among them Ureta Nasser, Minna Gombell, known to you, perhaps as Edna, the girl friend in "Bad Girl," Hedda Hopper, Allan Dinehart, Sally Blane, Claire Maynard and Betty Fraissen. Kenneth MacKenna directed the film from the screen story of William Hurlbut.

Changing Styles in Christmas Toys

The Toy Maker

BY LOUISE M. COMSTOCK

CHRISTMAS was a fine day for Santa Claus long ago when a simple Twelve months sufficed for the making of elves in the workshops of a stately Christmas tree of gold, and then a romantic evening wishing a clamorous wish over wilting Dolly Dimple and Bunnie valuing Brunett entirely with wide, welcoming stillness and sometimes fireplaces, stuffing stands, finished stockings with wooden dolls, rubber balls and sugar canes to fill in the odd and extra corners. A nose nothing to those golden days was the responsibility of choosing between the motto thereof lack of good heritage that set the rugged one or that recently. While very few little boys but were good, and deserving of sugar plums, evil rarely prospered, when father was a boy.

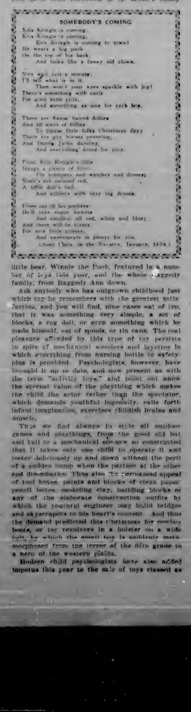
But changing times, ushering in steam boat, kindergarten with fifty cars, washers on a correct yard and a vocabulary on the corridor to accommodate the rounded words, chiffon hose and a universal naivety to the crude gold Style, have put Santa in the big business executive class. Today an easy job assuredly responsible for designing, constructing and distributing some $400 million worth of toys, all with a nice distinction between the good and the poor, a careful consideration for childish tastes, and correct assurance of changing styles.

Children are always among the most interesting study of their elders. Save that material from the very average human followed closely upon Bunkhill's changing whims and fancies. The dolls mirrored in Virginia Reels are made of wood and sometimes have movable arms and legs; but they all show that stiffness and emphasize upon the profile and geometric lattice of Egyptian art. Early African dolls without heads were given to children of the Mohammedan faith, for their religion forbade the reproduction of the human features. Among the toys of early Persian children we are not surprised to find many animals types with movable heads, reminding when taught how to wag and down. Rows of tomtoms on woollen wagons for the sewer to pull about, or a carved sledging on, wheels. Bronze children played with two-wheeled carts like the chariots in which their public heroes raced. Toys during the Middle Ages it was to judge from the few preserved for us, included knights mounted on horses modeled in clay, and slender ladies of terra cotta modeled in the elaborate costumes of the period painted in gold and brightest hues.

It is the mechanical toy, perhaps, which shows most emphatically the influence of present-day tendencies on children's playthings. From the tinker to automobile that winds up and darts furiously a few feet across the floor, to the $1,000 mechanical wonder which succeeds by means of springs and electricity to simulate exactly a real car or a whole circus parade in action—the purchase, usually, so toy dealers tell us, of rich grandparents and parents who wish to wind up the cat and watch the circus themselves—these toys employ every invention of modern science. And this year keen pace with current interests.

Toy sweepers today are crowded with miniature motion pictures cameras and projectors some of them capable of carrying 500 feet of film and all of which, so they are advertised, are easily managed by a twelve-year old. A few seasons ago, when a transatlantic flight was still novel enough to command a newspaper headline in all the newspapers, the mechanical airplane was in high demand, and toy golf equipment or indoor golf games dominated the toy store at the same time that mahogany golf greens began appearing in every vacant lot. To day mechanical racing automobiles and toy airplanes are supplanting the airplane in popularity, and automobile or horse racing games, and football, are crowding out golf in indoor games. Carry-car trucks with a Pathe-Sedan trailer capable of transporting four small models, and delivery wagons stocked with popular trademarked wares keep this type of toy in demand.

While mechanical modern toys are crowded with babies room whom current styles in curly or straight hair, blue eyes or brown, have no influence, one to ten-year-old mothers can be much more particular. For styles in dolls change yearly it seems. In grandmother's day all dolls were quite grown up, the youngest of them being pretty young ladies in pantalettes and artificial curls. The baby-doll, simulating a real baby, is a comparative newcomer, and ever it has suffered periods of more and less popularity with changing juvenile fancies. In 1920 the figure barrel beauty with the baby face languished unwanted on the toy counter, while the "flapper" doll, with dark bobbed hair, natty clothes and a complexion obtained mentally sanctioned, found a happy home. This year, thanks to the French Exposition or wherever it was who revived in us a taste for things old-fashioned and especially quaint curls, ringlets, long lashes and frilly wardrobes are in again. And baby dolls! Little daughter has apparently given up dreams of a career and the cares of Santa Claus for this Christmas nothing more modern than a doll's house to keep in order and a realistic baby doll to be loved and nursed and dressed and redressed. The dressing of miniature domesticity are also, it seems, more elaborate and thoroughly going than those of grandmother, in whom she doll itself was all sufficient. Their bodies a comfortable round robe, for wear; automobile little girl is going to stay over a toy sewing machine, even an electric one, or prick her fingers with a grown-up needle, what with the grand styles and the bar-



SOMEBODY'S COMING

Kris Kringle is coming,
Kris Kringle is coming,
Kris Kringle is coming to town!
He wears a big pack
On his back, on his back,
And looks like a funny old clown.

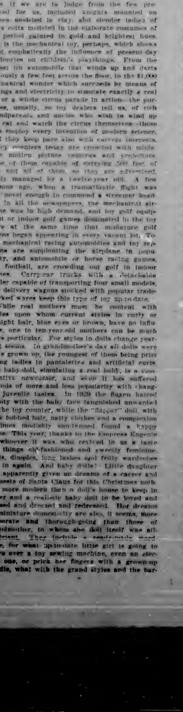
He's coming, I know,
He said what he'd do
Then said I was quite sparkle with joy!
There's something with cash
For good little girls,
And something as nice for each boy.

There are flaxen haired dollies
And all sizes of dollies
From little baby Christmas days
To Miss Sixteen Years,
With long, long dresses.
And everything dressed for play.

Then Kris Kringle's sleigh
Is always a place of honor
To compass and watches and dresses
Don't get carried out
A little dog's tail.
And a doll with very big dress.

Then out in his pockets
Doll toys and doll boys
And candies all red, and white, and blue
And sticks of candy
For wee little sisters,
And ammunition in plenty for you.

Dear Kris Kringle, I'm waiting, January, 1870.



little bear. Winnie the Pooh, featured in a number of boys' hits last year, and the whole scrappy family, from Raggedy Ann down.

Ask anybody who has outgrown childhood just which toy he remembers with the greatest satisfaction, and you will find nine-tenths out of ten, that it was something very simple, a set of blocks, a rag doll, or even something which he made himself, out of spools, or in case. The real pleasure derived by the little tyke of toy potatoes in spite of mechanical wonders and layettes in which everything from nursing bottle to safety pins is provided. Psychologists, however, have brought it up to date, and now present us with the term "activity toys" and point out among the several value of the plaything which matures the child's inner rather than the spectator, which demands youthful ingenuity, calls forth infant imagination, exercises children brains and muscle.

Those we find always to strike all outdoor games and playthings, from the good old ball and ball to a mechanical six-arm we constructed last. It takes only one child to operate it and teeter deliciously up and down without the peril of a sudden thump when the partners at the other end dis-mount. Thus also the "envisioned appeal of tool boxes, paints and blocks of clean paper, pencil boxes, modeling clay, building blocks or any of the elaborate construction outfits by which the youthful engineer may build bridges and skyscrapers to his heart's content. And this the broad practical idea Christmas for coming home, or toy receivers in a blister on a wide hole by which the small boy is uniformly made neighbors from the corner of the fifth grade or a hero of the western plains.

Modern child psychologists have also added impetus this year to the sale of toys classed as "educational." Instruction clothed as amusement, like a sugar-coated pill, may now be pleasantly administered in any number of playthings. When the instruction is for the very young, the educator movements prescribed toys that are durable under normal handling, and above all, absolutely hygienic. No more fragile dolls which the busy infant will more than likely crush with its first sculptic hug. No more blocks from which the bright colors may be marked by any aggressive baby or metal toys with sharp corners or rattling edges. There is, of course, some educational advantage in giving a definite piece of mechanism to its older child, especially if care be taken to impress upon him the proper care and use. The most up-to-date doll for the child of pre-school age, however is indestructible, frequently of rubber, so that it can be mastered to baby's pleasure, and is entirely aware of performing the most fascinating feats of mastication and springing back into shape without disclosing a dimple. The very latest blocks come with rounded corners, with smiling painted surfaces that resist much gnawing, rubber pieces and won't smash, or rub away. The stuffed animals are soft and can be cleaned, his engine and automobiles are solid but solid that they will not scratch or mar furniture, and have strong enough to bear the weight even of the contentedness child. Even the lithoed nursery four after dark.

For the first time in rudimentary education, the toymaker offers colored beads that can be strung into ornaments or grotesque animals and dolls, and all the wide variety of instruments to handicraft from plain and crayons and weaving to blacksmith and sewing cases. Then come "scientific" blocks, colored chunks of wood to teach color value and the principles of design, block letters to aid with the first lessons in spelling, blocks carrying words or whole Mother Goose rhymes illustrated, to be arranged into words or whole illustrated poems. Still more sophisticated blocks are fashioned to encourage the composition of a complete house or a skyscraper, or to represent all the advances of some story book character such as Winnie the Pooh.

For the child whose tastes are already sufficiently developed to be evident, the Christmas shopper may choose from current puzzles every panel of hundreds of fascinating colored blocks cut out with a jig-saw, which one intends to fit together and so is rewarded by a lovely map, or a famous masterpiece of painting. There are sets of chemicals done up in small vials and boxes, with directions for combining them in a profitless some of our commonest chemical phenomena and experiments by which the child is taught the principles of the cantilever bridge or of modern step-back architecture; and electric transformers which urge their possessor not to make his own electric toys. There are toy banks to encourage saving, toy cash registers for the small store keeper doctor's cases miraculously outfitted, garden tools, books, of course, and games.

Games, whether they profess, as many of the newer games do, to be of educational value or merely calm to amuse, all nevertheless have a certain tendency to quicken the mind and eye, to train the muscles to automatic response. Moreover, games have this real attained a certain definite style appeal through the present popularity of "adult games." The fact that grown-ups are playing them has in turn given new attention to many of the simplest of old drawn games, and made some-thing to them a sophisticated and interesting thing to do.

Just when and why the current craze for adult games commenced nobody seems to know. Some say it is the result of the vast interest lavish as a whole take today in outdoor sports; when the baseball and football season is over and it is impossible to take the family out-of-doors for golf or tennis, what more natural than that people should resort in their own indoor games to their own homes? Perhaps officials of the large automobile companies, who have distributed countless by filling in the long days of "winter, water everywhere" with dock tennis, shuffle board and table games in the smoking rooms are responsible. At any rate, last winter people in search of amusement broke away from the modern auction bridge through contract, backgammon became a surprising rival, first thing we knew, post tables appeared in the basement tennis tables in the attic, guests were given their choice between bridge and other method and the larger department and sporting goods stores installed flourishing adult game sections.

This consequently will be a Christmas of many games. Children and elders alike will drag out such old-time favorites as Flinch and Authors, or amuse themselves with the familiar checkers and chess. Then there are the many new games with famous events in history by a new name based on the History of Mankind, or Vanity Lane and go into convulsions excellent to effect a hearty Christmas dinner, over an imported game called Sorry, something of the inference of some of the newer games may be gathered from their titles: Hi Jack, Scram, Check mate, Double Check and Bramblette. For those whose outdoor sports were taken as participants rather than spectator, there is many active games, table tennis, bowling out, and all manner of minia-ture racing cycles, horse races, automobile races, dog races, mechanical and emerging Boulder Runs, now all among those who hanker to toy with chance and the use of automatic gambling devices. Among the latest games are Chinese checkers, Chinese checkers, Chinese checkers, Camel, checkers, club parched, carrom, be-a gammon, dominoes, ringtoss and snap-a-70.

BRIGHTER OUTLOOK FOR POULTRYMEN

Price of Eggs Everywhere on Increase.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture, Lewis Weld, Editor.)

With the price of corn and wheat lower than it has been for several weeks and the price of eggs on the increase, the outlook for the poultry industry appears brighter, in the opinion of Dr. M. A. Jull, poultry specialist of the United States Department of Agriculture.

Another point in favor of the poultry man is that hence culling of farm flocks reduced the number of laying hens by about 20 to 25 per cent. Ordinarily these hens would not be culled out until the fall, but this spring farmers were interested more than usual in saving feed bills.

Still another factor which makes the future look brighter for the poultry industry is the fact that there were fewer chicks hatched last spring than usual. This is particularly true of early hatched chicks, so that the early fall production of eggs fell short of last year's supply, with increases in prices.

Doctor Jull believes the immediate future of the poultry industry to be fairly good, particularly for those who produce eggs and high-quality poultry for market. For farmers who pay attention to high-quality chicks and for farmers and commercial poultrymen who give their flocks the best management and who practice efficient culling.

Good Laying Hen Makes Money for Her Owner

Take 50 pounds of grain give one good laying hen and you have 12 dozen eggs. With grain selling at one and a half cents per pound and eggs selling 30 cents per dozen this means a value of $3.60 for the grain, or a profit of $2.82 over the cost of the feed; or, selling grain at a price of $4.20 per hundredweight. Here are some more figures. The hen which lays only 25 eggs raises a loss of 64 cents over the cost of feed for one year; the hen which lays 50 eggs records a loss of one cent; the hen which lays 100 eggs creates a profit of $1.25; the hen which lays 150 eggs produces a profit of $2.49, while the hen which lays 200 eggs brings profit of $3.74. Watch the eggs brings profit of $3.74. Watch the dollars and get rid of the boarders.

Wrong Time to Water

Unscrupulous poultry dealers have been known to feed chickens sand and gravel to increase their weight, but here's a new one. An agent of the federal food and drug administration visited a wholesale poultry house and found that dressed chickens were being given "hypodermic injections" of water. A hose terminating in a hollow needle was used. Each bird received several ounces of water, which was promptly absorbed. This increased the weight and made the scrawny birds look plumper. Though federal agents could not interfere since the chickens were not shipped interstate, state officials had seized the profit making hose and fined the dealer.

Poultry Notes

The loss sustained by poultrymen because of poor egg quality is enormous.

A good way to combat poultry lice is to dip the entire flock in a warm soap in a solution of one ounce of sodium fluoride to each gallon of water.

Mites in the hen house are easily eliminated by the use of carbolineum. Spray or paint the entire inside with the substance, after thoroughly cleaning the place. Ask your druggist.

Tuberculosis is rarely found in fowls less than six months old. Most farm flocks are infected with this disease. An effective preventive measure is to get rid of all birds, before they are two years old.

Several of the diseases that attack growing chicks are definitely traced to a lack of vitamins in their rations.

Hens lay best in April and May when the days are from 13 to 14 hours long. Artificial illumination is one way to imitate the best working day for hens.

Figuring the cost of feed and price of eggs, a poultry expert in New York state says that a hen must lay an egg two days out of three in order to pay profits this year.

A recent official survey of a large number of New Jersey poultry farms shows an average production of 112 eggs per hen. Commercial flocks have to average better than that, to pay a profit in these times.

Less poultry on farms, reduced storage stocks of poultry and eggs, and increased consumption of poultry products and cheaper feeds in relation to prices of poultry and eggs are the outstanding factors in the poultry outlook, according to the United States Department of Agriculture.

More than 50 per cent of all farms in the United States have poultry flocks, 58 per cent have dairy cattle 56 per cent hogs, 22 per cent beef cattle and 6 per cent sheep.

The bigger the hen, the larger the egg. Canadian poultry records show that eggs from white leghorns weighing under three pounds averaged 2 ounces to the dozen; eggs from hens weighing between three and three and one-half pounds average 24.6 ounces; and eggs from hens weighing four and one-half pounds and over 25 ounces.

Christmas Joys Often Develop Into Sorrow

CHRISTMAS isn't always a happy, festive occasion, says the National Safety council. For some it is agony, mom with sadness rather than gladness. Do you recall that case a year ago when, on Christmas eve, the Binney decorations caught fire, two little trees were scorched and a home destroyed? Many other people were injured while celebrating the birthday of Christ in various parts of the country.

It would seem that Christmas joys in many homes are destined each year to be turned suddenly into sorrow. Causes are easily found. Usually the use of lighted candles on the Christmas tree or in the window of the home. Flammable decorations fails or replaced while decorating the tree, the use of defective electric equipment; the giving of knives, guns or other dangerous toys to little children; and in some sections of the country the use of firecrackers.

How things you say? Perhaps, yet each year these circumstances have a trail of tragedy. Celebrate Christmas, of course, but temper your festivities with common sense precautions.

After all, there is something doubly tragic about a Christmas accident. Somehow it just doesn't seem to fit into the Christmas picture. Nor does it harmonize with the spirit of peace on earth, good will to men.

Santa in Years to Come

If the right archaeologist sportsman survives, the savants who examine our civilization four or five thousand years hence will be thoroughly convinced that our principal deity was a fierce red-faced little man named Santa Claus, and that the animals sacred to him, called reindeer, were bound by great numbers in reservations.

Ten Years to Grow Christmas Tree

It takes about ten years to grow a Christmas tree, at the end of that time it has achieved a height varying from 7 to 10 feet.

A GLOOMY MOMENT? ? ?

"It is a gloomy moment in history. Not for many years—not in the lifetime of most men who read this paper—has there been so much grave and deep apprehension: never has the future seemed so inscrutable as at this time. In our own country . . . thousands of our poorest fellow citizens are turned out against the approaching winter without employment . . .

"In France the political cauldron seethes and bubbles with uncertainty: Russia hangs, as usual, like a cloud, dark and silent, upon the horizon of Europe: while the energies, resources and influence of the British Empire are sorely tried . . ."

This has a familiar ring. It might have appeared yesterday in any one of a hundred publications—probably something like it did. But the particular quotation comes from Harper's Weekly—dated October 19, 1857—seventy-four years ago!

There have been other depressions in our history. There will be other depressions, no doubt, in the future. They will be survived, exactly as those of the past have been survived. And the length of time it takes us to come out of them is dictated by the fear or courage of our people. If they attack our institutions, put government in competition with business, sanction exorbitant taxation policies and tax defeats, it will take a long time. But if they live normally, do their best to carry on their work and uphold sound and constructive governmental policies, depression will give way to normal conditions with the least loss and suffering.

RATE STRUCTURE VS. TAX STRUCTURE

Politicians who are attacking the rate structure of electric utilities might perform a more valuable public service if they turned their attention to the tax structure of government in this country.

The statement has been made, on good authority, that a billion dollars a year is wasted by governmental inefficiency and unneded government bureaus.

The total annual bill of the 20,000,000 residential customers of the electric industry is only $664,000,000. Consequently, if but 67 per cent of the billion dollars said to be wasted by government was saved, it would be sufficient to pay the entire domestic electric bill of the nation.

If it were all saved, it would pay the electric bill and give every man, woman and child in the country about $2.80.

By comparison, the tax issue makes the so-called "power issue" look like a very small needle in a large political haystack. We pay taxes every day—each meal we eat, each article we buy, each time we ride in an automobile or on a train or streetcar takes something out of our pockets for taxes, in addition to direct taxes on income and property. The electric bill comes once a month—and it is an infinitesimal part of the family budget.

If our politicians believe, in spite of the power industry's record of rate decreases, that electric service is too expensive, what have they to say about the high cost of politics?

FARMING ON THE UPGRADE

Is agriculture in this country on the brink of insolvency? Alexander Legge has just answered this question in a recent widely published article. "I am convinced," he says, "that farming today is fundamentally in far better shape than most people think. It has been having a lean hard time, but it is getting squared away for greater progress than ever. Agriculture occupies a sounder position than any other great industry today."

LEARN SAFETY FROM CHILDREN

If the adults of the nation had made the same improvement in learning how to be safe as their children, 23,000 fewer grown-ups would have been killed last year, according to Albert W. Whitney, Assistant General Manager of the National Bureau of Casualty and Surety Underwriters, and leader in the accident prevention and safety education work conducted by the large stock casualty insurance companies. The total accident toll of the nation is 100,000 annually and our children can tell us how 23,000 of these deaths may be avoided.

Since 1922, the year when safety education was introduced into the schools, there has been a 23 per cent increase in adult accident fatalities, while during the same period, despite the great increase in hazard, there has been a 2.3 per cent increase in fatal accidents to children. That covers accidents of every description in all places. When it comes to automobile accidents, the results are far more striking. Adult automobile fatalities for children of pre-school age decreased 16 per cent and for children of school age they decreased 13 per cent.

MOUNT VERNON

In all America there is no other home quite like this. Across its threshold the visitor steps back into the mid-eighteenth century. From grandroom to garret, its furnishings and mementoes bespeak the nobility of its central figure. As though he had gone but for a day he bids his neighbors enter and be welcome. And how they come, these neighbors! Increasing thousands as years go by, drawn in gratitude to the heartsteone of this wise and unselfish counsellor to his own and succeeding generations

Children are being taught to take care of themselves in all situations. Their safety education begins in the kindergarten and continues through the high school. Thus, the adult of tomorrow will be far more capable of meeting the hazards of life. It is a tragedy that the parents of our land do not learn from their children. The needless waste of life on streets and highways, in homes and in places of business is a blot on our civilization.

THE REQUISITES OF CULTURE

By George B. Lockwood

Prof. Erich Klicker, of Berlin, now conducting concerts in New York, says that in almost no country in the world has he found "such astonishing susceptibility to music" as he has in the United States. "I was stunned," he says, "at the tremendous popularity of the good music of all nations in America." Americans have, he says, the three requisites that make good music possible—religion, patriotism and love.

That America leads even Europe in the appreciation of good music is a statement that will of course be disputed by our home grown critics, who think it makes them appear sophisticated when they parrot the statements of many Europeans that Americans are barbarians incapable of understanding what they call good music, or any other higher form of art.

But what Professor Klicher, a competent commentator, says of the national characteristics which make the appreciation of good music possible, is something worth thinking about.

Cynics and materialists who are chronic knockers of America, and also of patriotism, religion and all sentiment and emotion, are the enemies of all cultural advancement, which flowers in real art of any description. Wherein humanity progresses, it advances beyond the material level on which mere animals live.

The materialist conception of society has rapidly gained ground in this country. It is entrenched in the colleges and churches as well as in the counting houses. Sentiment, emotion, enthusiasm, sympathy are ridiculed as puerile. This represents retrogression and reaction. Emerson in one of his essays made a strong plea for the preservation of the characteristics which are peculiarly American, rather than stupid imitation of the culture of the older world. Our history has been a romance of conquest over nature. The history of our republic is the world's most thrilling story of adventure. To fail to comprehend this is an evidence either of ignorance or lack of imagination. It proves that our great material progress has brought about the worship of materialism on the part of many, so that they fail to understand the meaning of America.

But our material development should be thought of as a means and not an end. It has meant not mere acquisition of wealth, and diffusion of comforts and luxuries, but an opportunity to millions for emancipation of the spirit from the clogging circumstances of lands in which the mere struggle for existence is necessarily the chief aim of life.

The material achievements of America are only the reverse side of the tapestry. The pattern is to be seen in all its beauty on the other side. The creation of an economic situation in which the mere battle for food, clothing and shelter, becomes incidental rather than the main object of life, hungs with it the obligation to use wealth and leisure in spirit takes wing into the empyrean. If materialistic things remain the purpose of our existence as a people, then all that we have accumulated is worse than worthless, since it will smother us in the lust for power to be gained by the selfish use of these things.

The political and economic philosophies now dominant in Europe are not for us, if we wish to achieve our peculiar national destiny. The European plans of dictatorship for economic purposes, crushing the divine spark of liberty that only can fire the heart of the individual, in order that despots may hold men in subjection in systems that have become gigantic jails and slim houses, would set up impenetrable barriers to our spiritual progress.

America is only on the threshold of her cultural development—if we hold fast to the principles, ideals and policies upon which our civilization is founded and by which it is progressing—that taste for those fields of human effort in which the human acted from the attack of lower morals, political and economic standards.

But these dreams can be realized only by retaining the standards of life and extending them to all Americans, which since they are men free, is essential to the diffusion of culture, not among a mere social upper crust, but among the millions for whom "general welfare" this nation was established.

WAR DEBTS AND COLONIES

Current discussion of war debts and the plight of Europe has led to a revival of the suggestion first made by Lenin and Trotsky, that the chief debtor nations cede to the United States their West Indian possessions in part payment of the obligations which they find difficult to meet. If European nations press for cancellation or a further scaling down of their debts this proposal will be inevitably forward.

America would not, of course, consider taking over any African colonies as partial payment of the war debts. But Great Britain and France have considerable territory in the West Indies and South America that might be turned over to this country if they are unable to meet their obligations. The British holdings include the Bermudas, the Bahamas, Jamaica, Dominica, Grenada, Barbadoes, Trinidad and British Guiana. France also has considerable territory in American waters, including the island of Martinique and French Guiana. Why should the two countries which enriched their colonial empires at Germany's expense be opposed to transferring these possessions to the United States as part payment on their war debts?

There are several painless ways in which European governments could relieve themselves of a part of their debts—an alternative to transfer of West Indian possessions to the United States is disarmament. But Europe is not willing to give up either territory or arms. It will be difficult to educate the American people and their representatives that Europe is in need of charity so long as the debtor nations insist on holding all their war gains and wasting billions of tax money in armaments.

The question of transferring British and French possessions in the West Indies to the United States should not be overlooked if this government is again asked to consider the capacity of the debtor nations to pay. They are quite able to pay in the same coin as they exacted from Germany.—Washington Post.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

With the opening of the present session of Congress it becomes more and more evident that the nation's legislators this winter will spend most of their time wrestling with problems of economy and of revenue. For as the fiscal year grows older it is clear that there will be a sizeable deficit at the end of the government's official twelve month period.

A few months ago it was the commonly accepted opinion that this new Congress because of its almost equal division would "run away with itself" so to speak. It was predicted that all sorts of unsound legislation, ranging from ideas of government operation, huge appropriations for unemployment relief, to the dole would be proposed, and possibly forced through Congress. But there has been a change of public opinion, to an extent at least. It is to be denied that bills calling for paternalistic legislation will be introduced, but those in touch with the situation are now more of the opinion that most of this legislation will die in its infancy.

There are several reasons. In the first place, President Hoover and the leaders of his administration in Congress will stand squarely opposed to unsound legislation of any sort, just as they have stood opposed to such legislation since Mr. Hoover's administration was inaugurated. And again the general public, which includes the voters, is coming to realize that we have been going through a serious depression and that we will not re-

ALEXIS IN WASHINGTON

M. Catacazy had ordered by telegraph a gorgeous train of four carriages, which were drawn up on New Jersey Avenue for the imperial party. A full, bright, new Clarence carriage, upholstered in cherry colored satin, and drawn by a span of full blood black horses and gold mounted harness with colored driver and footman in new livery, with the left lapper of the servant's overcoat decorated with a tube-rose and a geranium leaf, was assigned the Grand Duke, Admiral Poinett, M. Catacazy, and the first secretary, Mr. Dazaze. In the other carriages the rest of the suite were speedily seated, threading their way through the dug-up barricaded nasty streets of Washington, direct to the Russian legation. The residence of M. Catacazy was ablaze with light. A bright hued carpet had been unrolled from the doorway over the pavement to the carriage step. The Russian flag was flying from the roof, and on the street corner an American and Russian flag fluttered in the breeze. M. Catacazy was the first to alight and with head uncovered, handed out the Prince, who took his arm and followed by the rest of the party, entered the doorway thrown open to receive him.

An Ancient Custom

It is an old custom in Russia, handed down from the remotest antiquity, for any member of the imperial family of Russia on entering the house of a subject, to be received by the lady of the house at the door of the mansion, and in token of hospitality be offered salt and bread. In accordance with this custom Mme. de Catacazy, wife of the Russian minister, stood at the door of her house to receive her imperial visitor and held in her hands a round silver salver on which, with a circular piece of white paper beneath it, rested a large round loaf of Russian black bread. A small round piece was cut out of the top of this loaf, and fitted in it was a silver salt-cellar containing the finest table salt. This salt-cellar is a trowel of silver, about three inches in circumference, and is lined with gold. The bowl is supported by a stand which is a hemisphere of silver, about two inches in circumference. In offering it Mme. de Catacazy repeated the usual formula which Russian etiquette has established as proper on such occasions, saying in the Russian language, "I offer you bread and salt." The Grand Duke received it from her hands and gave it to one of his suite, and then passed into the house. The Grand Duke's immediate suite and Admiral Poinsett remained at the Legation, while the rest of the party, under attaches, etc., proceeded to a suite of rooms provided at the Arlington Hotel.

The Grand Duke's Dinner

The house has been in readiness for the reception since dark. The gas burnt brilliantly in the hall, and the black bread, which formed no important part in the reception ceremonies, was standing ready on the table in the hall. The parlors were ablaze with immaculate wax candles and lamps; the chandelier of glass had a triple row of wax lights. Gilt candelabras, each holding a dozen candles, stood on the mantel. Two antique lamps were placed on each ormolu cabinet, and above each gilt brackets attached to the well supported candles. The Emperor's picture was illuminated by a lamp, the full light of which was thrown upon it by a reflector. On an easel in the corner stood a beautiful portrait of Mme. de Catacazy. On the ormolu centre table was a bowl of exquisite flowers. Flowers, plants and ferns were on the vases scattered through both parlors. A wood fire burned in the grate in the second parlor. This room was also lighted with many wax lights. The dining room was prepared by six o'clock for the supper. The table was set for 12, and presented a beautiful appearance. It was almost covered with fruits and flowers. In the centre where the lamps from above shone its brightest light, was a very large and handsome epergne filled with flowers at either end, were smaller, but still large epergnes, each having fruit in a bowl, out of which rose a vase of flowers. Next these were silver candelbra with lighted candles. Next these again on either side of the epergne were silver stands filled with beautiful hot buns. There were numberless dishes of candied fruits, confections and sweets upon the table. At each plate for each guest were four glasses, three for wines, and one for water. All the glass is white, with the monograms C. C. and coronet of Mme. de Catacazy in gilt on each. The plates are of white china, with green and gold border; the monogram and coronet in green in the centre. A napkin was placed in each, and piece of bread within its folds. The napkins have the monogram and coronet worked in red. The knives, forks and spoons, all of solid silver, are inlaid with the monogram and coronet. Decanters of wine and water stood on the table. All the dishes are of silver. On the side tables white cloths were spread and the silver for each course ranged in order. Extra knives, forks, spoons, glasses, etc., stood ready. The plates were placed convenient to be changed at each course. The plates for the dessert were white with pink and gold border, marked like the others. On one of the tables the liquor stand was placed upon.

Mme. de Catacazy looked extremely handsome, her dress—one of those recently received from Europe—being very becoming. It was a pale lemon colored silk tissue, or crepe de Paris, of very fine texture. The train was very long and had a bias flounce about a quarter of a yard in depth around the bottom. The flounce was bound with a broad band of satin, the same shade as the dress, and headed by a band of satin and a narrow side-pleating of the material. Above on the skirt were scattered satin bows without ends, arranged to look as if they had been thrown carelessly upon it. The overdress was cut at the back and on either side, long, had apron front and was loop. It was edged with a bias ruffle about four inches deep, headed by three rows of satin piping. As the reception was not a formal one, the corsage was not decollette, but cut high, with a sapphire front, and loose sleeves. This corsage was of delicate white striped gauze, heavily embroidered in real gold bullion. The necklace was of gold, with a diamond pendant and gold locket, on which was enameled a marked face. The earrings were gold hoops studded with turquoise. Mme. de Catacazy's hair was dressed with long, flowing curls and a braided caronet across her head. The only ornament was a few buds of natural flowers. Her gloves were lilac kid.

After the supper was over at 9 p. m. Admiral Poinett retired to his quarters at the Arlington and Grand Duke Alexis wearied with the day, soon retired to rest.

Economic Policy Commission of Bankers Association Points Out How 22,000 Banks Protect Public Interest

OVER 22,000 banks all over the United States are "quietly and efficiently serving their communities, helping take many business enterprises over their difficulties, helping many concerns to save money, hinging on the economic activities that mean payrolls and spending power in their areas of influence, and faithfully keeping guard over the working capital and savings funds of their depositors," the Economic Policy Commission of the American Bankers Association says in a recent survey, adding:

"It surely stands strikingly to the credit of the banking profession that, during a period of unparalleled international economic depression, this vast majority of bankers have so consistently, so courageously and so successfully met their difficulties and obligations. The effects of the drought, the demoralization of agriculture, the stagnation of industry, the break down of trade, the inability of so many heretofore desirable customers to meet their obligations to the banks, the impairment of public confidence by sub-averse and false rumors resulting in unreasoning runs, the abnormal speculation of quite recently enough, even in the most widely conceived investment accounts, the utter collapse of real estate values—all these things have occurred on a nationwide and worldwide scale with unprecedented severity.

"The effects of every one of them have assailed the banks with destructive forces because they are of the very essence of a bank's economic existence. Yet, as we have shown, the great bulk of our banking deposits have been protected without hitch, and our banks, in a vast —many have continued to serve, support and strengthen their customers and their communities with unflagging and unconquered devotion."

WOULD ALTER OUR FINANCIAL HABITS

By ROME C. STEPHENSON

Former President American Bankers Association

THE most constructive action that can be taken toward arresting the present depression is the development of a more balanced attitude in the minds of all of our people in regard to the right relationship between saving and spending. There is a practical, solution to this situation that is simple during periods of prosperity so as to be able to spread during depression. This is a whole library full of charts and tables and books on political economy.

I do not believe it is an impossible dream to bring about an era of more intelligent saving and spending on the part of our people. It is not impossible to change the habits of the population. It has been done in many lines. The habits of our people have been improved and the health of the nation promoted in many ways by consistent programs of advertising and education that have brought about better personal cleanliness and practices.

The medical profession has virtually banished the scourge of some diseases by persistent, intelligent campaigns of preventive sanitary measures and inoculations, requiring new understandings, new habits among many millions of our people. Also a large part of this evolution of public health improvement has naturally developed through the intelligent advertising of many products that have to do with bodily care. I refer to the manufacturers and distributors of such things as pure (spirits) alkaline, safe effective toothbrushes, food products with more wholesome values of nutrition and countless other practical ideas that have become commonplaces of our daily business life, and that have become a part, too, of the very texture of the personal habits and health of great masses of our people.

If it has been good advertising and good business for so many of our national producers to spend millions of dollars thus to inculcate new habits of personal hygiene and personal care, is it not good business and good advertising for our banking interests to lay similar stress during the next period of prosperity upon better financial habits and customs of our people?

Bankers above all are interested in stable, wholesome business. They have much to gain by a state of sound financial health among the people, and most to lose by epidemics of economic maladies such as have swept the country during the past two years.

The man who has in better times been favored with too much credit rather than not enough is finding it be hard to pay his interest now with low prices for his products or labor.

cover fully from it until economy takes the place of extravagance in governmental expenditures as well as in private budgets. It is just as absurd to demand that the government embark in all sorts of unnecessary expenditures during critical times as it would be to demand that the ordinary citizens throw away his money and incur new debts in an effort to restore normal times. Everyone who has studied the question knows that it cannot be done that way, and that the government will have to balance its budget in order to meet conditions as they are.

Then again, it is now considered likely that there will be tax revision during the coming session of congress. It is now generally agreed that the depression is a major one, and that the government cannot go on borrowing money and anticipating the future while rolling up huge deficits each quarter. The only remedy at hand, therefore, is an upward revision of taxes, or the imposition of new kinds of taxes. Now taxation is not a popular subject, either with legislators or the taxpayers themselves. Nobody likes to see taxes raised. And during a period when Congress is under the painful necessity of raising taxes to take care of present and past expenditures, it is not going to be popular pastime to try to create new ways of spending money and new deficits which in the future will have to be made up with higher taxation.

Therefore, because of the President's stand, because of the general realization of the real governmental and financial condition, and because of the public's tax consciousness at this time, schemes for appropriating huge sums of money for more or less illusory ways of "curing the depression" are not going to be as popular as they look fair to be a year ago.

WHAT WE NOW ARE

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Emeritus Dean of Hon. Emeritus Dean of Hon.

Grover is quite disgusted with the curriculum which the college has put him in to study. He says he overrules things when he is home and he has nothing for it but to study. He says he is far in his job now and cannot find out the work which he is required to do in college. Many of the questions handed to him at LEAST three times are one he is familiar with. In ordinary literature or ordinary drill and a half hours other than with which his course is arranged.

The cause of all this trouble is the ignorance of those who do not study. A slavish imitation of boring methods which have been in use for years by the humorless in our common schools.

Training my students in a child study laboratory for two years, I saw the ignorance of the teachers in regard to the psychology of the child. I saw endless time wasted in memorizing material that I knew they would forget in a few months. I saw the pleasure of study of the pupils taken away by the methods used. I saw the pupils become disgusted with study and I saw the teachers become disgusted with the pupils. I saw the parents disgusted with the whole proposition. I saw the pupils become so disgusted with study that they would rather work than go to school. I saw the pupils graduate from the grammar grades with a hatred for study and a determination to have nothing more to do with it.

I saw many of the pupils graduate from the high schools with the same hatred for study and a determination to have nothing more to do with it. I saw many graduate from the colleges with the same hatred for study and a determination to have nothing more to do with it. I saw many graduate from the universities with the same hatred for study and a determination to have nothing more to do with it.

I saw many graduate from the professional schools with the same hatred for study and a determination to have nothing more to do with it. I saw many graduate from the graduate schools with the same hatred for study and a determination to have nothing more to do with it.

BANKERS DEVELOP NEW FINANCE AID

President of American Bankers Association Describes Plan and Services of National Credit Corporation

NEW YORK.—The National Credit Corporation, a banking institution formed by the members of the nation's banking system for the purpose of protecting the credit structure of the United States against the general panic of liquidation, was described by President Hoover's plan for marketing the new service and announcement of the initial subscription to the capital of $500,000,000 by Eugene Meyer, governor of the Federal Reserve Board, president of the American Bankers Association stated in a recent interview.

The organization of the corporation is an emergency, he said, to unite the entire banking system and increase the effectiveness of the Federal Reserve System in the agricultural and other districts in the South and West that have obtained them. In this crisis, general over-deflation of credit and prices have led to panic, or the desire on the part of individuals to withdraw their deposits from banks, even those which are known to be sound, and to hoard currency. Many banks have closed up under the stress and scores of them closed and have relatively few of them have been proved unwilling to the desire of others that have sustained them, so that they feel a sincere pride in our fellow bank ers." He added.

"So I come out of this year of many experiences not as a pessimist but as an optimist—as one with a renewed faith and confidence in the spirit of his fellow men under overwhelming difficulties. And particularly as I come out of this year as a banker who is proud of his fellow bankers for the unselfish way in which they have served their part of the great test through which the times have put the nation. I believe that this 'dog has brought a new honor to our banking traditions and our individual standards and have won me the banker new title to the faith and trust of all classes of his fellow citizens."

Wise Spending

Careful and wise spending will help solve our economic problems and will be of untold benefit to the nation. Our troubles are not caused by the spending of money, but because it was spent unwisely.

"BUDDY" ROGERS HAS SHIFTED TO DRAMATIC ROLES

Will Appear At The Palace Theatre In "Working Girls", next Wednesday, Thursday

Charles "Buddy" Rogers has another strongly dramatic role in "Working Girls," the Paramount feature, for next Wednesday and Thursday, in "The Lawyer's Secret" and "The Road to Rome" he showed capacity for strong dramatics, so he was shifted from personality parts to that of heavier interpretation.

Rogers, called "Buddy", since his appearance in a winning personality role in "Wings," is one of those lucky young men who found themselves in pictures without much planning for a screen career. He was just finishing his college course at Kansas University, when his father chanced to hear that Paramount was seeking candidates for a company picture school, about to be opened at the New York studios. He asked that his son be given a test. A few weeks later young Rogers was surprised to learn that he was to be given a chance in the school. Six months later he was given the male lead in "Fascinating Youth" the graduation picture.

Shortly after this success, he was chosen for a role in "So's Your Old Man," which was almost immediately followed by the leading part in "Illicit." Then followed busy days, being cast in a succession of excellent pictures, many of which proved outstanding successes.

Rogers and Paul Lukas have the leading roles in "Working Girls," playing opposite Judith Wood and Dorothy Hall.

Moving Air Best, Blood Tests Show

"Blood pressure is one of the most important gauges of the effects of air conditions on the body," says a bulletin on "Air Motion in Home Heating and Home Healing," which has just been issued by the Holland Institute of Theology at Holland, Mich.

Referring to blood pressure tests made in the research laboratory of the H. T. I. Heating Mines at Grandville, the bulletin shows that, with air moving at a standard velocity over the body, the effects of heat are not nearly so severe as when the air is still. Other similar tests show that air motion has a beneficial effect upon pulse rate and mineral body temperature, as well as blood pressure.

After studying how the air motion promotes summer time comfort the bookis describes several methods by which it can be used for its cooling effect in the home. Among these are the "exhaust" and "blower-cum-ply" heating systems which identified air circulators are installed to keep cooling breezes moving through the rooms of the house.

Finally, the new bulletin, which may be obtained by request to the Holland Institute of Theology at Holland, Mich., shows how these properties in winter making more efficient and fewer foot colds during cold weather.

HARD TIMES RENEW BANKER'S OPTIMISM

Former Bankers' Chief Finds Much in Past Year to Inspire Confidence in Financial Reliability

ROME C. STEPHENSON, retiring president of the American Bankers Association, sounded a note of cheer on the expiration of his term of office that, in the effective work done by the banks from one end of the country to the other during the past year, he had in the fact of it such a reasonable basis for the strength of our banking system and the determination of the American people, confidence in the agencies of credit. In the banks that have obtained them, in this crisis proved over difficulties such as even never had to face before, or in dealing with fortuitous disturbances that were beyond human power to prevent.

When he relinquished, he said, that the entire human resources of nation has been brought to the virge of ruin under the difficulties that have swept over and engulfed nearly all the entire world, and that the reaction of sentiment of this kind result with multiplied effect upon the stability of our banks, and, yet, how true it is to be admitted, we may well renew our faith deeds in the banks of America, when we think of how many of our bankers have stood up under the stress and storms of these times and live relatively few of them have been proved wanting in the desire of others that have sustained them, so that they feel a sincere pride in our fellow bank ers." He added.

"So I come out of this year of many experiences not as a pessimist but as an optimist—as one with a renewed faith and confidence in the spirit of his fellow men under overwhelming difficulties. And particularly as I come out of this year as a banker who is proud of his fellow bankers for the unselfish way in which they have served their part of the great test through which the times have put the nation. Those boyhood years between the ages of ten and twenty are the impressionable years—the formative years where the fundamental character of a boy is molded into the pattern it will maintain throughout the remainder of his life.

That is why so much importance is placed on the factors that govern the type of adolescent boys—their companions, their environments, their reading, the food they eat, etc. And in this age is determined whether the boy will develop into a cheerful or surly man, generous or selfish, intelligent or dull, ambitious or indifferent.

School teachers, librarians, Scout leaders and others engaged in boy activities have found that THE AMERICAN BOY-YOUTH'S COMPANION magazine is one of the most favorable influences a boy between ten and twenty can have. Its stories and articles are a force for good—wholesome, alive, inspiring.

The million or so boys who read this magazine every month absorb it their closest friend. In it they find a keen entertainment, adventure, mystery, athletics, aviation, business—everything that delights a healthy American boy. Its sports articles by famous coaches and athletes help boys win places on their school teams. Its professional articles help boys in their early manhood and plan in selecting their life's work. Its keenly analytical editorials help them to think in daily problems.

SPORTSMEN'S CLUB MEETING

UNUSUALLY INTERESTING SESSION IN K. P. HALL

The Charlevoix Sportsmen's Club meet in the K. P. Hall last Friday night to organize and plan their program for the coming year and subsequently to enjoy an oyster supper.

The purpose of this organization as was very clearly pointed out is to make Charlevoix and vicinity a more desirable place for those who enjoy out and fish, both resident and non-resident, which, in the long run would benefit every one, woman and child in this community.

In view of this fact it would be to the interest, not only those who hunt and fish, but every one living in this vicinity, to do all they can to support the Charlevoix Sportsmen's Club.

Stover Creek

In the general discussion of the evening when fishing was the matter of the depletion of water in Stover Creek and the trapping and destruction of fish and game, this stream was brought up. This condition is deplorable and some steps for the preservation of all concerned to bring about a satisfactory remedy.

The club members have a dam across Stover Creek at the site of the old dam for the purpose of forming a basin in which small fish may be planted and cared for until they were ready to be released into Lake Charlevoix was discussed, it was brought out that nearly all the necessary material and assistance was available and only needed the initiative and cooperation of the club to bring into existence facilities for the replenishing of Lake Charlevoix with steelhead, bass and trout.

There has been considerable work done by various members of the club in the matter of restocking Lake Charlevoix with fish but in view of the size of this lake a much more concentrated effort on a greater scale of operations are necessary to make results satisfactory.

The matter of planting seed in Lake Charlevoix came up for a few remarks. A united effort is needed to bring about the cooperation of the proper authorities in the elimination of such operations.

Two-Fish Regulation

The new regulation limiting them fishing in Lake Charlevoix to two fish was discussed and finally it was the city of Charlevoix to two trout came up for consideration. Owing to the direct proximity of these lakes with Lake Michigan where nets may be used to take large quantities of these kind of fish it appears inconsistent to limit fishermen on these lakes to this amount of catch. Needless to say this also is a matter of interest of this community who depend to some extent on this means of obtaining food for the winter months. It was the unanimous opinion that something should be done to relieve this situation.

It was called to the attention of the club that there was considerable demand for fishing similar with the fishing grounds at this vicinity by nonresidents who came here for the express purpose of fishing and the benefit of obtaining and the registering of reliable guides was made evident.

Dogs and Dogs

Some of the reasons for the diminishing supply of game was given. One of these was the permitting of dogs to run at large through the surrounding country. Dogs prey on the young game and consequently kit the supply at its source. Also this was some reason to believe that these depredations even extended to sheep. In one instance related three head of dog shot off the lower jaw of one of the wooly tribe. Which brings out the interest of the farmer in supporting and cooperating with an organization that has taken a stand against such things.

At this period of the discussion the chef conveyed the information to the assembly which led them to believe that quantities of baked oysters were at large in the adjoining room, which caused an exodus that brought to an end a session which might have lasted until morning as far as the want of material for discussion was concerned.

During the activities around the festive board a committee was appointed to bring concrete evidence as to the abundance of rabbit in this vicinity before the members and guests of the next meeting of the Charlevoix Sportsmen's Club which is to meet again next month at a date to be announced later.

Watch for it.

Don't miss being there.

BROADWAY ACTOR SHOWS PROMISE AS FILM PLAYER

John Breeden, Broadway Juvenile who made his screen debut under the Paramount aegis in "The Beloved Bachelor," has an important part in Kay Francis' next picture, "The False Madonna," which comes to the Palace Theatre on Thursday and Friday, December 24 and 25.

Breeden's youthfully fresh vigor and charming personality flashed to such good advantage as the young "boy friend" of Dorothy Jordan, the girl Paul Lukas finally fell in love with in "The Beloved Bachelor, that Paramount signed him up on a contract for more appearances.

In "The False Madonna," Breeden is the wealthy orphan youth who had been deserted in infancy by his real mother, Kay Francis, working with a gang of international "confidence crooks" is represented to him as his own mother. He never learns of this deceit. He becomes greatly attached to this "False Madonna" and she in turn finds herself genuinely in love with him Breeden's role is a sympathetic one, and will earn him a big following among the film fans of the country.

Breeden's career in the theatre began when he was a boy. After he played in stock on the Pacific Coast, starring in his first picture. When he went to New York he received praise for his work as the juvenile in "Mendel, Inc." HIGH SCHOOL PLAY DRAWS BIG CROWD THURSDAY EVENING

The Junior class of the Charlevoix High School, presented the dramatic production, "The Enemy" last Thursday evening at the High School gymnasium before a large and attentive audience.

The moral of the play was the failure of war and the cast of characters was well adapted to the parts. The entire performance was carried out in a manner that won the approval of those in attendance.

The play was directed by Mrs. Ruth Bowd and during the intermission between the third and fourth acts she was presented with a beautiful bouquet of flowers by the Junior Class in token of their appreciation of the part in making this production possible.

The music, an especial arrangement for this particular play, was especially enjoyable and well presented by members of the High School Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Ritter.

Eighth Grade Honor Roll—

Adaline Bellinger, Gladys Dickerson.

Ninth Grade Honor Roll—

Jack Withers.

The seventh grade had a most enjoyable party Saturday evening. The hours, from 7:30 to 9:00 were spent in playing games and running relay races.

In a rather surprising fashion, the girls defeated the boys in a basketball relay race which may be partly accounted for by the larger number of boys who had to put the ball through the line.

Later in the evening, the boys managed to come out previous the decomfitture by winning a game of volley ball by a large score.

Sandwiches, cake, and delicious hot chocolate ended the evening in a very satisfactory manner.

The seventh grade appreciated very much the presence of Misses Milligan and Dasef, Mr. Ritter and Mr. Ingham.

In a Saturday morning basketball practice, the seventh and eighth grade boys played the seasons work in preparation for several games, with other teams chosen from similar groups in East Jordan, Boyne City and Harbor Springs.

The primary court as provided for by the Charlevoix, Jr. High constitution is being effectively organized by Lewis Greenman, Director of Public Safety.

At cases necessitating its sitting arise, the court will hold sessions on the Primary Court will be present. If the accused fails to be present at the time his case is up for trial, contempt of court will be considered and additional offense.

Under the direction of the assembly committee chairman, Helen Lovett, a fine Christmas program is in the midst of preparation. The actors in the plays have been assigned their parts so preparations are moving forward smoothly.

The Death of Francis Donlevy

The death of Mr. Francis Donlevy on the 8th inst. at the home of his daughter, Mary E. O'Donnell removes from our midst one of the lands oldest and most venerable citizens His passing marks the end of a long line of intrepid pioneers who came to the island shortly after the departure of the Mormons under Strang in the middle '50s. He was the oldest person in point of residence on the island, having resided here almost continually for nearly the three quarters of a century.

Among the many hundred of hardy, courageous men and women who settled on the island in the early days, rejoicing in their freedom, he was the only one left. The others have all passed on. Mr. Donlevy was born in County Donegal, Ireland, May 14, 1844, and when a very boy his parents immigrated to this county and settled in Toronto, Canada. In 1853 while he was yet in his teens he came with his parents to Beaver Island who settled on a parcel of government land. Young as he was at the time circumstances forced him to go to work and help his father clear up this land in order to provide a permanent home. Thus the lessons he learned while attending school in Toronto, of obtaining a substantial education, were blasted.

However, being deficient of improving his mind, he set about the task of educating himself, utilizing the meager methods at his disposal. In this manner he succeeded in securing excellent mental training for himself.

He was an inveterate reader and his excellent eye sight made it possible for him to read the smallest print without the use of glasses.

He was a profound student of the Bible, an admirer of Shakespeare, besides being well versed in ancient and modern history. His remarkable memory coupled with his wide knowledge of the world affairs made him a very interesting person to converse with.

His integrity of purpose, his uprightness of character, taken in connection with his amiable disposition, was appreciated by all whom he came in contact with. His loyalty to his adopted country and his advocacy of the principals contained in the Con-

Christmas is Almost Here!

By LOUISE M. COMSTOCK

"Merry, Merry Christmas everywhere;
Cheerily it ringeth on the air!
Christmas Day is coming fast,
Christmas odours in the breeze. . . ."

CHRISTMAS is almost here! And now we find ourselves somehow saying doing the things we have done at this time of year, with enthusiasm which repetition or business deprives today fail to happen.

It is a wonderful and thing this spirit of Christmas, in the sense of whom we speak wrests and pocketbooks in a stupendous effort to make Joy universal for at least one day in a year. When we try to analyze it, realize away from it the treasured usual and emotive offerings with which many years of sentimentality and commercial exploitation have in some extent encased it, we find it based after all on the most lasting, worthwhile and certainly the most prevalent of human instincts. There will always, of course, be those who prefer to snarl and flout the spirit of Christmas, and busy business men who will send the stenographer out to buy the wife's present or else run a few checks through the mail, but the vast majority of those who give because they have received or expect to receive or hope to outdo the rest of the public in the matter of Christmas generosity the same. If of Christmas is sound and true and healthful, as it probably is, for even when displayed bank accounts and curtailed wages put a new significance on gift-giving and industry is the poorest merrymaking for the sake of a fatty or a tradition, being demonstrated more convincingly than ever now.

What else but the real spirit of Christmas makes it possible for us to go into ecstasies over an off-shade necktie from Chipon Kitty, or a scrap of silk sentiment three times too small from a school mate who hasn't seen us since we were twenty-one and a perfect fright, to-day? What else gives the strength, now that there are only a "few more shopping days" to go, to dive into dust storms, elbow through crowds on the counters, pay more than we should or intended for something we are not sure will please, and still keep forgiveness and good-will among the fleet? What else gives the shopper on our side of the walk who collides with an unstarting gift bundles, setting our hat askew, trampling on corns already much abused?

Gift giving itself is founded upon the noblest sentiment of them all, the very heart and soul of Christmas, which is celebrated merely the annual celebration of a great Gift. The custom of exchanging gifts at this season probably dates from the first offerings made to the Nordic god Yule for a fruitful year. Saint Nicholas of the fourth century Bishop who is said to have inspired our modern Santa Claus distinguished himself by his lavish gifts to the poor of Lycia. Asia Minor Like Christmas feasting, however, giving reached extravagant proportions during the days of the Sixteenth centuries, and Queen Elizabeth is said to have received almost her entire personal wardrobe as Christmas gifts from her subjects, and an unfavorable quality of many loose Jewish introduced into this country by the first Dutch settlers, the custom of filling the children's stockings and heaping presents upon young and old alike has become one of the most important things about Christmas.

Nor is there any indication that there will be less gifts given this Christmas than in previous further years. When figures showing the total savings representing the various Christmas savings clubs throughout the country were published recently, they showed the staggering sum of $300,000,000. A year ago the total was more than last year, but much more in real purchasing power due to cheaper prices. It has further been confessed that in 1920 81 per cent of this total amount savings is actually used in making Christmas purchases, while an additional 9 per cent this year probably much more, can always be counted on for educational and charitable gifts. Certainly there will be no diminution in the amounts of charity gifts this year. National unemployment relief programs, local drives by charitable organizations, and individual gifts, our clothing, baskets of food, money, toys, will surely be made in greater abundance and in closer accordance to the real spirit of Christmas than ever before.

One of the most painless methods by which we join in the universal philanthropy demanded annually at Christmas time is by the purchase of Christmas seals. This is the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Christmas seal. In this connection, the first Christmas seal in the United States work in Copenhagen, Denmark, in 1904. A postal clerk, familiar with the vast numbers of packages mailed at this time of year, suggested it as a means of raising money for a charity hospital. One of the original Danish seals, which sent a Christmas package, reached Jacob Riis, social reformer and friend of Theodore Roosevelt, who was so enthusiastic about the idea that he wrote to his friends in America published in the Outlook. There Miss Emily Bissell, trying to raise $1,000 for a tuberculosis pavilion in Wilmington, Delaware, read about it. She borrowed the idea and had the first American Christmas seals printed and sold in 1907.

Today, under the direction of the National Tuberculosis Association, this work has reached vast proportions. In one year over 6,000,000 of these little stickers were sold. At a penny

1. "Gee, I hope I get something like that!" Young America lines up in front of store window to gaze longingly at the fascinating display therein and to hope that "ol' Santy Claus" will bring just what they have been wanting.
2. This bright unusual Christmas tree is both big size than a gigantic pretty wax candle. If somewhat overloaded, example of having his Yuletide gaiety early in the season. Friend wife directs operations, and all he has to do is to furnish the funds and transportation.
3. Christmas shopping is by no means confined to the adult population. Here is a group of youngsters spying their wise supports over 3,000 affiliated tuberculosis associations and committees throughout the country. A twenty-fifth anniversary seal of 1921 bears the head of the Liberty Bell, symbolic of the world-wide fight against tuberculosis and a good old English stage coach with its Washington living describes in his famous Letters of '76 and traditional English Christmas celebrations.

Another year to which we spend a goodly proportion of our Christmas money is that which just rode past the American public some hundreds of years ago, and merits the same honor as the first Christmas card was sent out in 1843. The idea was that of Henry Cole, then a London civil servant, and was carried out by John Calcott Horsley, an artist friend of Cole's. The cards were printed by a London firm, and were then hand-painted by a lively trestle. In the two side panels were scenes illustrating the charitable virtues of Sixteenth centuries, and Queen Elizabeth is said to have received almost her entire personal wardrobe as Christmas gifts from her subjects, and an unfavorable quality of many loose Jewish introduced into this country by the first Dutch settlers, the custom of filling the children's stockings and heaping presents upon young and old alike has become one of the most important things about Christmas.

Now that Christmas is almost here, too, we begin those immediate preparations which are almost as much fun in the doing as in the anticipating once they are done. No good housewife or healthy once but is already planning the Christmas dinner and dreaming of turkey and before pie and sweetmeats galore!

Time was when Christmas dinner was many weeks in the making and many hours in the serving, but that was before the days when the grocer around the corner was brought even nearer by the telephone and quick delivery service, and every nearby restaurant offered a tempting mother's own. Today even Christmas dinner may be prepared in case, and fortunate. If so, limpkin's modern woman in her neat white enamel and shiny chromium plate kitchen, after solving together this recipe for "stewed prunes" an old English Christmas favorite. Two bushels of flour, 20 pounds of butter, 4 pounds, 2 turkeys, 3 rabbits, 4 calf shank, 10 sweetbreads, 6 snipes, 4 partridges, 2 ox's tongues, 3 curlews, 7 black birds, 6 pigeons." Dig even an her elaborate the day's cooking with which little Sally Fair fax of Virginia, waiting in her diary in 1771, confide her mother: ". . . Mamma made six mincepies, and seven quarts of sweetmeats to-day which I helped to eat."

"Prefer, mutton and pottes,
Shred pies of the lean;
Sauce pies of the same,
And turkie well drest."

There was also the famous hare's head lumpy to mouth and ears sewed on a pasteboard and the many; the peacock, roasted, sewn back into its own skin with wax, lovely feather in place, generously garnished and carried in at the head of the procession with due ceremony; launches of venison, plum pudding, frumenty and the always delightful wassail drink. The chief pie unlike its modern descendant was the coffin, which was baked in a long dish, shaped like the modern sarcophagus of Gothic days, and filled with boiled cattle or food-may, in the reading, make the modern stomach turn, there was probably in the tanning ambition able to far away. A REAL OPPORTUNITY FOR STATESMEN

The Congress will have one outstanding problem on its hands while in session — how to balance the budget, which now is sadly out of line.

Billion dollar deficits cannot be cured by conversation; nor can they be solved by shifting taxes or by creating new bureaus and commissions. There are two ways to settle them: one, by raising taxes generally; the other, by cutting down governmental expense. Which way is taken is up to the Congress to decide.

In these days businesses and individuals have taken all possible steps to eliminate waste by operating in the most efficient manner. Government, in general, has done nothing in this direction. It is as wasteful and inefficient as ever; there are an increasing number of proposals to have the government do this or that with the taxpayers' funds. The official ears are usually deaf when it comes to pleas for tax reduction. Once the government enters a new line of activity, it is practically impossible to get it out. Every new activity means more taxes.

The tax problem is one of the most serious new perplexing the nation. There are limits beyond which the taxpayers cannot pay without having a barrier erected in the way of industrial development, home building, investment, employment. It is up to the Congress to find a sane and economically sound way out of the difficulties into which it has plunged us, by tax reduction, not tax increases. Unnecessary tax luxuries, can bankrupt an individual or a nation.

POLITICS PLAYING WITH INSURANCE

A special session of the Massachusetts legislature was called to reduce the cost of compulsory automobile liability insurance. The session took seven weeks.

According to the Boston Standard, this entailed an expense to the taxpayers of $140,000 —aside from expense to witnesses, insurance companies, and others, while the net result was one insignificant act "which could and should have been taken care of in a few minutes of any regular session."

The Standard says that "helpful and constructive legislation was blocked . . . Lower rates for urban centers meant higher rates for suburban sections . . . If the vote of the members is properly construed there was shown a lack of understanding and knowledge of how the insurance business is conducted. . . .

"The legislature failed to pass any new laws governing the operation of motor vehicles . . . or strengthen the authority of the registrar of motor vehicles; it did nothing looking to a greater elimination of careless and incompetent drivers . . ."

In other words, politics, not economics, was in the saddle. This is no particular reflection on the Massachusetts legislature; the same condition would have obtained in any other state. By its very nature, government is inefficient and wasteful when it comes to matters of business. The Bay State's compulsory automobile insurance law has often illustrated that axiom in the past; now it has given us still another good illustration of the error of legislation which, while passed from good intentions, has served only to encumber the processes of justice, place further burdens on the taxpayers and discourage business.

THE GAS TAX RACKET

It is interesting—and saddening—to observe the abuses and rackets that have grown out of excessive taxation of gasoline.

On the Atlantic Seaboard, gasoline bootlegging is said to be really "big business." Governor Pinchot has estimated that tax evasion robs the state of Pennsylvania of $18,000,000 a year. Frauds have been exposed in Illinois and Indiana—the latter state they are said to reach a minimum total of $2,000,000 a year. Louisiana reports immense quantities of gasoline being brought in tax-free from Texas. An Idaho farmer bought 20 gallons of gas, added two ciphers on his ticket, claimed exemption from the state for 2,000 gallons—and collected the claim of $100! Not the least interesting part of this case is that he was convicted of the fraud—and fined $5, leaving him $95 clear profit!

There is hardly a state in which fraud and tax evasion are not practised. It is a testimonial to the futility of forcing a tax on a necessary commodity so high that the public rebels. Those who advocate higher gas taxes had best look facts in the face and understand that when the tax gets high enough, it produces less revenue for the state than when it is reasonable. Downward revision would be more to the point.

A POOR TIME TO RAISE TAXES

"Higher federal taxes held sure!"

This is the song politicians in Washington have been singing.

Now that Congress is in session, there will undoubtedly be a flood of bills to appropriate millions of dollars for new expenditures, on top of current operating costs of government. Each proposed expenditure will require tax funds for final liquidation.

This situation is gradually soaking in on the public mind. The voter is developing a tax consciousness. It is going to be constantly more difficult to convince the taxpayers that the cost of government cannot be reduced exactly as the cost of living and the cost of doing business have been reduced.

Take a tip, Mr. Politician—this is a poor time to try to increase any taxes. Scratch your head to bring about a reduction;—it will get you more votes.

Few people would have the temerity to try to figure out how much it has cost the taxpayers in actual money and how much more it has cost them by delaying private development of electric power that would have paid millions of dollars in taxes during the time Muscle Shoals has been a political dog in the manger.

Believe It or Not--By Ripley

Of course you believe it! Christmas seals—now 25 years old in the United States—have saved thousands of lives since people began to buy them to put on holiday letters and packages. But the battle against tuberculosis is not yet won. Other thousands remain in dire need of the means of prevention which Christmas seals can give.

Governor Buys First Seals

BUSINESS OF STATE and a roomful of important callers at the executive office in Lansing wait while Wilbur M. Brucker, Governor of Michigan, buys the first 1931 tuberculosis Christmas seals from his salesgirl son, Wilbur II, as Mrs. Brucker innocently watches the transaction. Most of the cash, by means of which anti-tuberculosis wars is made on Santa Claus's 85 counties is financed, begin Thanksgiving Day and will continue until Christmas.

Governor Brucker, who is honorary chairman of the State Christmas Seal Committee, has issued a personal appeal to the people of Michigan to support the work of the Michigan Tuberculosis Association and county tuberculosis societies by buying Christmas seals this year. Emphasizing particularly the critical unemployment today of work to prevent tuberculosis, which he termed "the foe of childhood," he said:

"Until tuberculosis is wiped out, no child—young or mature, and no matter how favorably placed in his home—is safe from the danger of tuberculosis infection and disease. We must not backslide here and give to a disease which can be prevented and cured. Let us not suffer the loss of childhood or a parent's health to tuberculosis's heinous toll."

The tuberculosis death rate in Michigan far exceeds the death rate from any other communicable disease in children under 20 years of age, and is among the three leaders both in the age group from birth to 4 and from birth to 15. The association and its affiliated societies are launching at the present time, on account of funds secured in the sale of Christmas seals, a concerted statewide campaign to discover the thousands of Michigan children known to have the childhood type of tuberculosis.

Silkman's dock at Torch Lake was also a victim to the fury of the storm, but to what extent we have not been fully appraised. The storm was the severest known here for several years.

SIXTY YEARS AGO

There is a fair prospect of several buildings being erected in this village next season, combining a large up-right addition to the Fountain City House, two store buildings, and the balance residences.

We dropped down upon the schools one day recently, and found everything in perfect working order under the management of Prof. Bond and Mrs. Cleora. Both schools combined number nearly fifty pupils.

High Honors Accorded Fourth-Century Hermit

The world laughed universally at last summer's "Mooney Marathon," when aquatic nuts took to trees in endurance contests, and there would be no better proof than these lives changed. The Fourth century took almost performances more seriously.

Theodus Simeon Stylites. He chained himself to a great rock on which he began to erect a column of monster stones. Aided by his admirers, who rapidly increased in numbers, he raised the pile first to a height of 6 and finally to 60 feet. At the top he built a diminutive hut enclosing the last of 30 years and the roof of an ounce wide terra.

He sometimes evaded in an erect attitude with his outstretched arms in the figure of a cross, but his most favorite practice was that of bending his manger skeleton from the forehead to the feet, and a supreme exhibition of human endurance, consisting of nearly 1,244 repetitions at length brought from the endless ecstasy.

Numerous visits without descending from his pillar as a result of an illness on his thigh. The story owed its origin to pride, and to the story goes, summoned an angelic form and from on high, let down a rope ending in a fiery missile. He invited Simeon to ascend by it, but declined and the wraith was gone. As he lifted his feet to step up, the devil sparkled his cunning and vanished in a cloud of sulphurous smoke.

This enthusiastic ex-pillar was for the fourth great reprise and when a few years later his bones were buried in Antioch, the patriarch of the city, the master-general of the East, no matter, it counts as millions and 6,000 soldiers formed the guard of honor.—Covenant Flash Review.

Two Days of "Freedom" for Husband and Wife

It is a mistake to think that two people rich in this Twentieth century, live their whole lives happily, successfully and abundantly on the basis that husband and wife are one, unless each party to the arrangement is free to follow his own tastes and fancies. Otherwise you inevitably get boredom and unbearable dullness. Business has worked many marriages which otherwise would have been unspoiled.

I have eliminated the possibility of dullness. The two days each week I forsake my humble. It has proved a really sound arrangement. I do what I like, do not with friends I choose, even though some of them be from my mind entirely for those two days. Still, he does not object. For those two days we are our lives apart as if we had no mutual responsibilities at all.

He chooses his own friends. Some of his friends I dislike as much as he dislikes some of mine. Hence we are just rich and uncontrolling.

The days we are together we enjoy each other more than we do when been apart. We are each of us refreshed and have something new to talk about. It is not a real plan and I might even say that it is a plan which many other people might find very amusing. They will be surprised at the results.—Annie Leon in the London Saturday Review.

Mounted Cop Spy in Red Ranks

Canadian Tells of Moscow's Hopes of Secession.

Toronto—Sergeant John Leopold of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and a celluloid court jury now recently lost for ten years in jail upon an active member of the Canadian Communist party, avoid acting as secretary of the League between and attending a grand Communist conference in Moscow, to get the low down for the Canadian government on the aims and ambitions of the Reds in the Dominion.

When he testified in court against nine alleged Communists charged under the new federal law with being members of "an illegal association," Leopold wore his red uniform for the first time in a decade. Throughout all the preceding ten years his searing appeal has been working under a rough clothing and his master the secret reports and confidences of the alleged emissaries in Canada of Moscow.

He told of Moscow's hopes for Canadian secession, from the British empire, of plans formulated for a Red revolt in Canada, of secret codes and communications from Moscow, of an "A" Communist party which worked legally in the open, and a "B" party which worked illegally underground, and of a shakeup of the Canadian Communistic arm at the demand of Moscow because it was too sufficiently active in fomenting strikes and unrest among the working population.

Leopold's entrance into the witness box was reserved for the last item of the crown's case in the sensational trial, and recognized as a deportation case of 45 valuable activities, one of the first ranks. Nine parts of answering days placed on him from the prisoners such as he relentlessly forced the secrets of the Canadian Red organization and then reached the secret council by which individuals were designated to party positions in the Dominion.

The presentiment appreciation of the Communist scheme, revolving from Indian brink with the British empire and Red revolts in the mining and industrial centers of the dominion, related with meetings or movements aimed at government authority. It had before it all the information which Sergeant Leopold gave to the criminal court. But the government revealed nothing of it in parliament at this time.

Sergeant Leopold was known in the Communist party which he served as Worker secretary as J. S. Somerville. He told his intimate side of its most guarded members. His sensational testimony relative to Moscow's interest in Canadian secession from the British empire came when he was discussing the latter congress of the 1925 convention of the Communist party of Canada.

At this 1925 convention, he said, one Moriarty was the delegate from the Communist international headquarters at Moscow. Moriarty, he said reported that since the previous international conference in Moscow, a commission has been set up to discuss the prospect of Canadian independence.

"Severing from the British empire," Leopold replied.

This Moscow commission, Leopold explained, had appointed a member of the executive committee of the Communist International.

Leopold interrogated and identified a literal trunk load of Communistic literature and communications which had figured one way and another in Canadian Communistic activities, and in the relations of the Canadian party with the Moscow directing head.

One of the interesting revelations was the code system used by the party. It was a cipher code, he said, based on a certain page in a recognized publication of the party. By writing numbers certain letters were indicated in a certain order. Number 57 would mean the fifth letter in the seventh line of the designated page.

Only time and even the code given a key, and subversive men even then, dual with meanings of movements aimed at government authority, it

At this last and lofty elevation he endured the heat of 90 summers and the cold of as many winters.

He sometimes crossed in an erect attitude with his outstretched arms in the figure of a cross, but his most famous practice was that of bending his passage upstairs from the ground to the roof, and a further repetition, after supporting 1,244 repetitions, all taught himself from the extreme accurate.

Simeon took without demanding from his admirers as a result of an ulcer on his thigh. The pious would its action in curing him of the sore, the story goes, summoned an eagle from mid air to lick away the pillin top in a fiery chariot. He invited Simeon to ascend to him himself, and the saint, nothing loath, mounted on a chariot of stone-stones somehow.

There was hardly a royal court which did not have in the entertainment of the king, too, who was summoned on trumped-up charges for his money. And there was Nicholas le Flamel, also merchant and banker, with the sinister Pierre Raymonde, whom the duke of Orleans and so much he had killed murdered to get the money from his pockets.

The romance woven in pearls and events of death continues. Jaime of Majorca died in the arms of his friend a harried friends over her face so many wounds it was irreparable. Henry III thought so many of his friends were poisoned that he died himself. Whereupon it entered the Vatican in a brilliant red tape and began to drum a reign.

When the Crusaders were the pinnacle thing. It was the weapon that made the ride with it was worn under a coat of mail, the brilliant banners with the cross and the rich impression for the person it was the weaver too, who pursued the first the release from the terror of the spooky end of the world prophesied in the year 1000 when kings were dating their documents "from the near the end," and who of us who is him that it were on and on until it joined with the rest of the Christian age.

Camels and Locomotives

One of the biggest concrete bridges in the world is along the new railway lines being built through Turkey. Although only a little over 500 miles long, the two lines penetrate difficult country, necessitating the building of about 2,000 bridges, large and small, and many tunnels. In Angora, an average of 30,000 blasts of dynamite a day are used to dislodge the rocky mass. More than 10,000 peasants know and sleep-levels are employed on the work besides thousands of peasant women who labor as stone breakers. An oriental touch is given to the picture by thousands of camels used to transport supplies as the building progresses.

OLD AGE AND EMPLOYMENT

By THOMAS ASTLEY CLARK, Executive Head of Mac, University of Illinois.

Harmon is out of a job. I saw him on the street yesterday, standing aimlessly, discouraged looking and inactive. He is not incapable; he is not without education of a sort. He has held a number of responsible jobs; he finished high school before he went to work. He dresses with care; he reads a good deal so that he has intelligent views and he gives the impression of being a gentleman.

The trouble is he is sixty years old and no one seems willing to take him on. The firm with whom he was last employed failed, went out of business, and left Harmon high and dry like a floundering ship cast upon the shore by the waves. He has cried many times he could think of but to no avail.

During the last few years the man over forty who is out of employment has had a hard time to get a job. A man of rich experience with the jobless says:

"Test people past forty cannot get jobs became notably evidents after the war, when a lot of them were thrown out of employment, and were never able to get their jobs back. Neither this is the definition which has swept business circles that only the young are able to fit. Efficiency experts are to blame. Everywhere they are pooping as gods, they throw out older people, in order to sell themselves they must make changes.

"Overspecialization, too, operates against them. A man said he was refused a job as a driver of a laundry wagon because he had been a milk wagon driver.

"It is true that young men may have more initiative, they think more quickly, they are more alert, though they are not likely to think more accurately, but men take more time but they are surer. Young men are more adaptable, they learn new ways more easily, they take more risks, but they have less judgment.

"There is still a place for the old man in any business where experience and judgment counts.

Washington.—Results of an investigation of recent practical developments in the design and construction of concrete highways will be presented at the twenty-ninth annual convention and road show of the American Road Builders' association in Detroit, January 11-15, 1932, the association has announced.

More concrete has been used in surfacing rural highways than any other type of material, the association said. The advantages of concrete construction and various types of design have been studied by an association committee and will come under discussion at the convention.

Plane Wings Shortened in Flight Help Speed

Berlin.—The speed of an ordinary airplane may be increased to 250 miles per hour through a new Hoodian invention, now being studied by German engineers, it is reported here.

Airplane wings which can be shortened during flight and lengthened as the craft approaches the ground have been invented by a Russian engineer whose name the Soviet government does not divulge. This invention is said to increase the speed of a plane by approximately 100 per cent.

The aviation department of the Soviet government believes it has solved the problem of reducing the resistance of the wings of airplanes. The fact that when a flying machine leaves the ground it needs a wide wing span, but that as soon as it reaches a higher altitude where fast flying is desired, short wings with little air resistance are essential, has kept aeronautic experts of all countries busy in an attempt to find a solution.

MEDIEVAL ABBEY IS BEING RESTORED

Monks Labor 26 Years on Old Building.

Ashburton, England.—The great medieval abbey of Buckfast, which has been in ruins for four centuries, soon will stand fully restored as a monument to the talents of a little group of Benedictine monks.

For forty years twenty-six monks, working in relays of six, the monks who live serenely in the beautiful Dartmoor valley have been rearing the vast monastery from its original plan outlines, laid in the Eighth century. Virtually unaided, they have rebuilt it on its former design, and next August it is to be consecrated.

The abbey is a magnificent gray and yellow stone structure. Only the crenellated external tower and the foundations remained when in 1800 the monks decided to restore it. Although none of them had any knowledge of constructive work, they were determined to do their work without outside help.

"There was but one brother who knew how to handle a hammer and trowel," said Dom Anselm Vonder, the smiling, grey-haired abbot. "Dom Wilfred Upton, who had been a farmer before he joined the community, was a stonemason by trade. He had served his apprenticeship in that craft before he entered Buckfast as a novice. He taught us all we know about building."

"The earth has grown old with its burdens of care,
But at Christmas it always is young."

We challenge the people of Charlevoix to give the churches a chance to present the Christmas message next Sunday, through their ministers. There are many people of every community whose lives are locked up so far as being moral benefits. The Christmas message might be the key to that closed life. History is made up of lives that have been spread, sometimes by only a word, and those lives have lived on and on in many generations. Jesus came to preach the gospel to the poor; to heal the broken-hearted; to preach deliverance to the captives, to recover sight to the blind; to set at liberty them that are in bondage and to preach the acceptable year of the Lord. Attend some church next Sunday and hear again the Christmas message.

Next Sunday will be another Joy Sunday. The subject of the message will be "The Gift of Love."

We are pleased to announce that our fast going basket ball players, the Polar Bears, will be our guests Sunday morning. The invitation from the pastor was unanimously accepted and the boys are planning to come in a body.

Miss Lois Fessenden and Miss Helen Parker will return home from Olivet College Saturday and will remain during the Christmas holidays. Miss Fessenden is a freshman and Miss Parker a senior at Olivet.

The Junior Church will hold a Candle Light service Sunday afternoon at the regular service hour. Master Donald Tillotson will lead the service. This same group will sing carols Christmas eve. If there are any families who would especially like to have the youngsters sing for them a lighted candle in the window will indicate your wishes.

A committee composed of David Coulter, Ester Case, and Ester O'Neil will arrange social activities for the Young People's Forum for the Holidays.

Because of death in the family of Mrs. Stelter it was necessary to give up the plan of the musical Christmas program being arranged by the adult choir. This program was to have been given next Sunday afternoon. There is some indication that the service will be given Sunday, December 27th, but that announcement is not certain.

The Church School program will be held Thursday evening, December 24th. Mrs. Parker and Mrs. Miller have charge of the program.

The Ironton Church School will hold its Christmas program Tuesday evening, December 22.

SCHOOL BAND GIVES CONCERT

DELIGHTFUL PERFORMANCE IS ENJOYED BY MANY

High School Gymnasium Is Packed To Capacity; Remarkable Demonstration

The Charlevoix School Band making its first fall concert appearance last Thursday evening in the high school gymnasium, gave a program which was as varied and spicy as it was artistic.

The largest audience ever to listen to such an organization in Charlevoix enthusiastically applauded this unusual group of young musicians. The spontaneity of the band reflected the careful training under Mr. Rider as director. Each variation and technical phase was perfectly executed by the artists, trained of the directors baton.

The program opened with Sousa's High School Cadets, probably one of the most difficult high school marches by this famous composer was very ably presented by this well trained group of instrumentalists.

The outstanding number of the evening's entertainment was Ed. Ed. Chenette's "Northern Woods," characteristic and descriptive overture. Music by Chenenette is usually extremely difficult and this number undoubtedly showed such characteristics. Northern World required the strict attention and ready command of each instrument, which these young musicians played with apparent ease and self confidence.

Much of the success of the concert was due to the brilliant clarinet work of Hugh Parker. Superb in tone and technique was Hugh's interpretation of the 1st movement of Weber's 1st Concerto. This difficult solo was ably supported by the splendid accompaniment of Mrs. Rediker.

The band not only showed instrumental capabilities but they also showed they could sing. They were well demonstrated in the stanza of Sousa's "U. S. Field Artillery." The words were written by the director.

During the concert intermission the glee club sang several numbers all of which were done in a very pleasing manner. Their selections were: "Winter Song" by Bullard; "Bach Mid the Cluster and Corn" by Rosenfeld, "Grant Us To Do With Zeal" by Bach and "Hail Charlevoix" by Rider.

The second part of the program included Elbul's march, "Men of Valor"; "Simplicity" a very delightful selection by Dorothy Lee. The brass quartet composed of Virgina Bluck, James Block, Carl Beattie and Robert Cummings played two Christmas hymns in a very well executed manner. The unique ensemble effects in "Beneath the Holly" were extraordinarily brought out by the various instruments. The evenings entertainment was brought to an appropriate finale by the stirring music of the famous "Lights Out" march by Mc Coy.

The brilliant colors of the stage setting added much to the effect of the concert. Those in charge of arrangements were: Decorating Committee—Ruby Superman, Virginia Bluck and Lloyd Arnold.

Program Committee—Edna Knutsen, James Bluck, Carl Beattie.

ERRONEOUS IMPRESSION FROM COURT DECISION

In recent newspaper dispatches regarding the decision of the United States Circuit Court declaring the Michigan State Alien Registration Act Unconstitutional, an inference was created that the decision referred to the United States Registration Act passed by Congress, March 2, 1929, and consequently aliens are not applying for registration. This Act provided for the registration of aliens who entered the United States prior to June 3, 1921, and are eligible for citizenship and are of good moral character and of whom there is no record of legal admission and who have resided continuously in the United States since that date.

This is an erroneous inference as the United States Registration Act is still in force and effect and any alien who comes within the class mentioned can make application for registration at the Immigration Office, Detroit, Michigan, both by personal application or by mail. 33

AMERICAN LEGION BARNYARD PARTY

MANY TURN OUT AND AFFAIR CONSIDERED SUCCESS

The Barnyard Party held at the American Legion Home on Garfield Street Tuesday evening turned out to be a successful affair. The evening's entertainment was enjoyed by a large crowd and netted the Legion a tidy sum which will be devoted to relief purposes.

Work of aiding the needy in Charlevoix and vicinity is being vigorously carried on by the members of Leon Te T. Shapton Post under the direction of Welfare Officer Clarence Meggison. To date, some twenty-five children have been outfitted with shoes and clothing from the Legion fund and supplies.

Last Sunday, about a ton of fresh, salted and frozen fish was distributed to our needy Charlevoix and in East Jordan and Boyne City and about two tons of fish are still on hand.

The welfare officer has located several woodists and an opportunity is being given unemployed men (whether Legionnaires or not) who are in need of fuel to cut for their own use. The men are taken out to the grounds in cars, carrying their dinners with them, and the city trucks are used to haul them out and bring them back with the fuel.

There is plenty of wood and anyone is welcome to join the crews who wants the fuel and is willing and able to swing an axe.

The Legion post wishes to take this opportunity of thanking the Ladies of the Eastern Star for their very welcome donation of five dollars for the relief fund.

The next affair at the American Legion Home will be the dance on the night after Christmas, December 26th.

Some person or persons, unknown at this time, burglarized the store of Fred E. Cartier during the hours of Sunday night, making a clean get-away and taking with them a small amount of change from the cash register, two suits of clothes and an overcoat.

Sheriff Vaughan was notified of the burglary and is working on the case, which up to the present time has not been productive of results.

Entrance to the building was made by forcing open a basement window, after which the program of the guilty party was easily carried out. In this special precautions were taken to avoid leaving any evidence of a criminating nature though what substantial theories could be based or lead to the apprehension of the thieving visitor or visitors.

Gilbert B. Baltimantail, medical student at the University of Michigan, motored up from Ann Arbor three or four days ago to spend Christmas season with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Brayton Baltimantail, 408 Mason St.

SCENIC PAGEANT GREAT SUCCESS

LARGE CROWD ATTENDS PROGRAM SUNDAY NIGHT

A very large crowd attended the first Christmas pageant last Sunday evening at the Methodist Church. Every bit of space in the entire building was filled—afternoon, balcony, and aisles—with many standing.

The presentation has been pronounced by many as one of the finest non-professional presentations ever given here. The committee in charge was Mrs. James Simmons, Mrs. Adah Beeman, Mrs. A. C. Belding, and Mrs. W. W. Hurd. The choir of sixteen voices, with Mrs. Ray M. Couse, of Chicago, and Mr. A. C. Belding, did remarkable work, and reflected great credit on Mrs. Belding who had the music in charge and directed and trained the choir. The elaborate cantata-anthem, "On the Night of Memories" by Wilson, gave opportunity for finest effects, among which was the soprano obbligato by Mrs. Couse, with the choir singing an arrangement of "Silent Night," second in minutes and harmony.

The solo, "In Victory", by Mrs. Couse, and Mr. Belding's solo, "Birthday of a King"—both by Neidlinger—were beautifully rendered, with the finest interpretation and artistic effect. One of the new, modern, old-style is "The Adoration," by Borowski, and was beautifully given on the violin by Miss Lucile Gernoud of Petoskey, who also accompanied the various scenes of the pageant.

This was given the finest lighting effects and showed the usual scenes of the great Christmas story—the shepherds, the angel, the wise men, Mary, Joseph, the manger scene, etc.

Much credit is due to the local Odd Fellows for the loan of some beautiful and expensive costumes for one of the scenes. Mrs. Beeman planned the staging of the scenes, while the interpretive readings were given, with much dramatic effect, by Miss McMillan.

Harold Newman provided the only changes in the lighting. The many who took part cannot all be mentioned personally, but the committee greatly appreciate the ready response and cooperation of all.

LEGION AUXILIARY CHRISTMAS PARTY

The Christmas Party staged last Saturday afternoon by the American Legion Auxiliary in cooperation with the local legion post, for the children of this community succeeded far beyond the fondest of expectations.

It was a joyous bunch of youngsters that made the trip to the depot to meet Santa on wagon loads of hay. And the reception given Santa Claus was enthusiastic enough to assure him that he was welcome to see the singing and shouting on the return trip to the town and up to the Legion Home on Garfield Street, where the children, over 700 hundred of them, of all ages and sizes, were each given a present.

All in all it was a great party and thrilled the onlookers as well as the children and those sponsoring this affair may feel well repaid for their deserving efforts.

RECORD HAULS BEING MADE BY COMMERCIAL FISHERMEN

Records are being made by commercial fishermen out of this port and St. James, both as to size of whitefish taken and the number of pounds in the lifts made in recent days.

Four tons or more have been taken in a single trip by some fishermen while others, including splendid hauls in Lake Michigan waters.

In recent days these fishermen have been reaping a financial harvest and coming as it does at Christmas time, was most opportune for the men and their families.

PATERNAL INSTINCT

A Story of Great Devotion

By Fannie Hurst

WHEN people send laughingly and entirely without opposition brings to refer to Reuter's maternal instinct, his children, particularly his daughters, had formed a sort of unspoken compact to refrain with unanimity. "What's the matter with paternal instinct? Aside from being the best mother either he's the best father."

It was only subconsciously that the protecting banter from themselves. It implications might have attached itself to Reuter's maternal instinct. As the parents of the breed of fine youngsters they themselves were, they had long since ceased to think of it as unique.

Reuter would not have minded had those lines been seriously. He was too big for that. Indeed, he would have rightfully felt affront, for there was a certain tenderness in Reuter's mothering. It seemed unfitting to resort to any label to describe it in a solution of any common, inoffensive, homely word, and vague. It must be ripped forcibly and dried at once.

How to Make Old Santa's White Beard Fireproof

NEVER a Christmas passes without a conflagration from the Lair Thomas a schoolmaster who lost treasures as an Indian Queen was burned through the cotton wool of which his white beard is made—a most alarming fire.

It is just easy to find a substitute for cotton wool, and it is not difficult to make the beard fireproof. Mix sulfate of ammonia and borax in the proportion of two ounces of each to a pint of water. Let the wool soak in this for a few hours, then squeeze it out and let it dry. Cotton wool treated in this way will not burn, but will smolder and char at once.

At Christmas Eve

By Rev. Abram Ryan in Philadelphia Record

All there's nothing like a Christmas Eve!
To change life's bitter gall to sweet,
And charge the sweet to gall again,
To take the chorus from our fear—
The theme and staff that sweep past,
Only to put them back again.

To take sad songs from our out-hearts—
Lift songs that made them glad and smart—
Only to sharpen them the more,
And press them back to the heart's core.

Ah! there's nothing like a Christmas Eve
To melt, with kindly glowing heat,
From off our souls the snow and sleet,
The frosty dirt of silvery years,
Only to make the cold stain bolder,
Only to make a colder moor;
And make it drift, and drift, and drift,
In flakes as icy cold and swift,
Until the heart that lies below
Is cold and colder than the snow.

Ways of Building Up Orchard Soils

That Trees Be Given Enough Food for Production Is Important.

The average orchard soil is fertile enough to provide good growing conditions for most fruit trees, provided the orchard is given eight or ten cultivations during the spring and early summer. The time the trees must lots of food, as well as cultivation, starts when the orchard is old enough to produce heavy crops of fruit. Unfortunately, many orchard sites do not have sufficient plant food in the form of organic matter to provide the trees with sufficient food for maximum production or annual crops when that stage is reached. This means that production is bound to be subnormal unless this very necessary organic matter is supplied. It is very expensive to provide this in the form of barnyard manure and no form of commercial fertilizer will entirely fill the bill.

The wise grower takes these facts into consideration while his orchard is young. He makes every effort to build up the organic content of the soil each year in addition to giving sufficient cultivation to encourage a good growth of his trees. Soy beans or cowpeas are excellent soil builders and can be planted in late June after the most important cultivation is over. If there is a possibility of the trees suffering for want of moisture, the soy beans should be cut for hay, and the cowpeas left on the ground to mature their seed. The latter will add more nitrogen to the soil than the soy beans, but the latter will produce a heavier growth of vines. Both crops will add humus and nitrogen to the soil, and will help to conserve the moisture supply.

He showed white teeth in a grim smile. "What lesson, then, do you gain from Tarayan, which is de-stroyed?"

"The last man in that dual city, a graybeard patriot, died in my arms, and with his last breath he cried, 'Viva Bolivar!' It was enough to inspire me."

I waited.

"What else, Senor? I am waiting."

"That you tell no one what the Senorita Lamartina is."

Who Was Who?

UNCLE SAM

TALL, lean and genial face, striped trousers, familiar symbol of the United States: what one person would be so bold as to claim to have been the original Uncle Sam? Yet it True, N. Y., there was recently erected a monument to just such a person one Samuel Wilson, who flourished in the most exciting epochs in the time of the War of 1812 and became the namesake of a whole nation quite by accident.

In 1812 Elbert Anderson of New Jersey secured a contract to furnish "2,000 barrels of prime pork and 500 barrels of fine beef in full tested barrels of white oak" for troops stationed at Albany. Samuel Wilson, more familiarly "Uncle Sam," was appointed as one of the inspectors of the said stuff of the Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh. Before Both and Sons were packed. BLACK MARIA

FOR many years it was not the "blue circus" that carried disturbers of the peace and petty criminals to jail; police ticket drives and gambling joints, but the "black Maria" their captives on to a vast on wheels. Instead they was for the Black Maria. The origin of this name is lost to one of the most unfounded of our early illustrations.

In old colonial days a negress named Maria was a prosperous sailor's boarding house in Boston. She was a woman of gigantic stature and Amazonian strength, and used them to good advantage in maintaining quiet and order on her own establishment but with an eye and down the waterfront she was a terror to evil doers. When ships carried canvas and sailormen ashore were wont to be a rollicking lot, and Maria had her hands full to keep things from getting out of hand. She was not regular for hustling saw and obedient. Those who were not in the habit of obeying her soon felt the effects of her strength. It was said that the police authorities frequently called upon her for aid in making arrests, it is said that she once single-handed, herded into the lockup three recalcitrant members of the force who had struggled with her. Her fame as a fighting woman is said to have spread to the waterfront districts of foreign ports, and the name "Black Maria" was given to the police patrol wagon in use in the United States.

Hogs Gain in Weight Through Using Wallow

To prove that a hog wallows for warm weather will pay in dollars and cents as well as to make the hogs comfortable an experiment made by the Texas experiment station is related. Three lots of fifteen hogs each were used. The hogs were all as near alike as it was possible to get them. The hogs averaged 65 pounds at the start of the experiment. All three lots had the same kind of feed and all other conditions were kept alike except that one lot had a wallow. The hogs were fed for 82 days. At the end of the 82 days the hogs without a wallow weighed 180 and 192 respectively, and required 1,000 pounds of feed to make 100 pounds gain while the lot with the wallow weighed 208 pounds and required 800 pounds of feed to make 100 pounds gain. The lot with the wallow gained 28 pounds more in the same length of time than did the two lots without a wallow, and used 200 pounds less of feed.

Avoid Bruised Apples

When a badly bruised apple finally gets to market it is unsightly. Even when it did when it was yanked in the bushel basket at harvest. In fact, it may be unsightly even before it is picked.

Apples are tender, of course, in seeing that apples are properly handled is to be the first consideration. Pick them ripe, but not overripe. Some growers use canvas buckets which, in the long run, are a rascal giving more satisfactory results. For that matter, though, the ordinary picking bag gets results almost as good. Avoid bruises from almost any utensil where a man has to carefully will put his weight on the fruit. Another vital kind of a receptacle he uses. The point to always keep in mind is to handle apples as carefully as though they were breakable.—Exchange.

Brown Rot in Peaches

According to Dr. Howard S. Wheeler, Cornell university, the fungus causing the brown rot of peaches lives over winter on dried, rolled peach mummies that fall to the ground and lie in the dust and grass all winter. In the spring little stalks are sent up from these mummies, and on the top of each stalk the fungus produces a steaming cup by which clouds of spores are blown into the air to be shed up and settle on the peach blossoms. The blossoms so affected turn brown and die, reducing the set of fruit and causing rotting of the ripe. A partial control of this season-ing fungus is attained by covering the ground under trees with a coating of very fine sulfur dust.

Car to Pull Hay Rope

Many farmers find it convenient to operate the hay rope in the mow by the use of a horse. By using the car in reverse, the horse can be unhitched and can better watch the way the load is going. It is not necessary to back the team to unload, but simply to drive forward. The car is reversed by the use of a simple pull and fork, then trip the load and pull back the fork as the car moves back toward the barn. In lieu of a second gear.—Michigan Farmer.

Holstein Records

A total of 173 Holstein breds in 25 states, exceeding 2,041 pounds of butter, reported as completing records in the herd test. Approximately one-half of the herds averaged better than a pound of butterfat each day for the entire year. In each group 10 or more than half of the herds were milked twice daily yet 32 of those averaged more than ¾ pound of butterfat per day. Wisconsin leads with 41 herds; Michigan, New York and Ohio in the order named.—Successful Farming.

DEBT CANCELLATION

It seems to be the temper of the majority of the members of Congress in both houses that there shall be no debt cancellation. Considerable feeling has been aroused in the matter, a feeling which, according to some cable dispatches, European "experts" are unable to understand. The explanation is easy. In the first place when the debt agreements were reached, practically all of that part of the debt contracted before the armistice was wiped out so that the term "war debts" is somewhat misleading.

And again, the American people resent the efforts of European politicians to make it appear that reparations and debt payments depend one upon the other. From the American standpoint and the logical standpoint this is not true. The United States demanded no reparations from Germany and took no territory. Territory taken by some of the allied nations is much more valuable than the entire amount of the debt owning to us, a great deal of which was for supplies left in Europe and sold to some of the governments there at a very low cost.

Since Uncle Sam demanded no territory and no reparations the "picking" was made much easier and better for the allied nations and they at least ought to be able to pay us the debts incurred after the armistice was signed. Up to this time Germany has paid most of its reparations from money borrowed from the United States and Great Britain. Had it not been for those loans little reparation would have been paid. It comes with bad grace, therefore, when France claims that those reparations or political debts, which represent nothing more than the will of the conqueror, imposed on the vanquished, should come ahead of commercial debts.

Of course Uncle Sam does not expect any nation to pay more than it can pay. That would be expecting the impossible. But it is yet to be shown that a wealthy nation like France, possessing nearly half the gold of the world, is unable to pay us any more than she can extract from bankrupt Germany. And the cases of the other nations which owe us will bear some close scrutiny, too.

Of course the situation has been complicated by the action of the international bankers who have loaned billions to Germany and other European nations in the quest of high profits. These bankers now want the war debts cancelled, feeling that this will lead to lower reparations, and better security for their own loans.

The Senate the other day, by unanimous vote, adopted a resolution proposed by Senator Johnson for an investigation of these financial transactions of the international bankers in Europe. We are likely to hear a great deal more about these international loans in the near future.

HOME OWNING

Nothing makes for the stability of a family, a city, a state or a nation as does home owning. Except for those theorists who dwell in the rarefied atmosphere of impracticality, the possession of a home is likely to mean stability of character, conservatism and patriotism. The loud-mouthed anarchists who advocate the destruction of property and the communists who demand the division of property, almost invariably are those who have none to destroy or to divide.

President Hoover knows this and a belief in it probably inspired his calling of the home conference in session recently at Washington.

Nobody should be a renter who can avoid it. Sometimes, of course, one's occupation prevents his possessing a house of his own. His business may keep him moving from one place to another. He is to be pitied and his family more so. But for the average man who considers some particular city his home town, a place wherein he labors and has his friends and interests, the ownership of the dwelling in which he lives is a boon. It is a stimulus to thrift and endeavor and it makes toil sweet. Such a man can say proudly to all those about him, the guests whom he entertains, the neighbors with whom he takes daylight in friendly intercourse, "This is my home." It need not be a palace, it need not be an estate, it need not be in the finest location in the city or the countryside, but if it is neat and comfortable and has a spot of ground about it in which to grow flowers and shrubs, it may give him greater peace and contentment than the rich man's palace with its gorgeous gardens, its swimming pools, its dozen bath rooms, its period architecture, its costly rugs.

And home ownership is something for which sacrifice is worth while. Almost anything that really is of great value requires sacrifice. Things that come easily are not appreciated. One who patiently for ten years or twelve has paid out of his weekly wage envelope a portion to the building and loan association, will experience a greater joy when the last payment is made than will one who inherits a fine dwelling that has cost him nothing.

There never can be much danger of hot-headed revolution among a nation of home owners. A social order that could make it possible for every willing household head to own the dwelling in which he houses his brood, never need fear an overturning. Socialism, communism and all the other "isms" designed to fool the fancy by depicting impossible wealth and luxury for all, regardless of talent or willingness to work, would leave such a people cold.

What President Hoover's conference will accomplish in the way of actually providing plans whereby the owning of homes may be increased nobody can say, but if it attracts the attention of the American people to the value of home owning it will have done much.

It is unfortunate that the depression of the last two years has partly closed the financial channels through which the masses can buy houses and lands. That, of course, was a natural accompaniment of conditions. Those who lend money for this purpose when times are good cannot be blamed; they have been acting for the protection of their stockholders.

But let's hope the financial skies are clearing and that out of this Washington meeting ways and means may be devised to add to the number of those who now enjoy the blessing of dwelling beneath their own vines and fig trees.

THE DANGER OF BUREAUCRACY

Dr. C. Jeff Miller, retiring president of the American College of Surgeons, in opening the 21st annual clinical congress of that body, expressed grave doubts as to the practicability of health insurance and state control of medicine in this country.

A few hours after another doctor had presented a report on hospital standardization which placed only about 65 per cent of the 3,319 hospitals in the United States on its approved list, Dr. Miller said: "Public and municipal hospitals are filled with medico-political appointees whose ability is frequently negligible and whose ethics are frequently doubtful. One has only to look at the corruption in State and municipal governments all over the country today to question very seriously the claims which are made for further State control of anything."

What an indictment! It is apparently impossible for politics to take on any extraneous activity without replacing efficiency with bureaucracy, able men with political hangers-on. This is particularly reprehensible in hospitals, where the life and health of thousands of people are at stake.

And, if it is true of hospitals, what would happen if the power industry, the insurance industry, or any other great business were turned over to the politicians? In these cases, the actual life of the individual would not be endangered by incompetence, so partisan politics would undoubtedly go to any limits in filling the businesses with their friends and supporters. The result would be lowered efficiency and still greater burdens for the taxpayers.

USE THE DERAILING SWITCH

"While individuals and private commercial enterprises everywhere during the last two years have been compelled to reduce expenditures to meet impaired incomes, one has looked in vain for any of the units of government to undertake to cut its cloth to fit the purses of the people," says the Chicago Tribune, editorially.

"There is rapidly growing evidence that, altogether aside from conditions due to the depression of the last two years, the tax load has reached a point beyond the capacity of many to pay. A study of Wisconsin's tax situation just compiled by R. O. Wipperman of Milwaukee, points to that conclusion.

"A delinquent tax list of more than $22,000,000 in 1931 for Wisconsin, with its high percentage of skilled and thrifty workers in the cities and its successful agricultural sections, is prima facie evidence that the taxing authorities are out of step with the population."

The Tribune has pointed out a situation in Wisconsin which exists in more or less the same degree in practically all of our states. The political machine and its expansion along bureaucratic and paternalistic lines has gained such momentum that hand brakes will no longer control it and it is a question whether air brakes can check the speed. It may be that public sentiment will have to open the derailing switch and consign to the ditch many of the fantastic measures and tax-consuming propositions which the politicians seek to load on the nation under the guise of movements to benefit and help the "dear people" but which, in reality, are proposed primarily on the theory of carrying public favor and rolling up votes for the proponents.

FORD'S THEATRE

One of the dreary old buildings in Washington is Ford's Theatre which has been famous since civil War days because it was in this building that President Abraham Lincoln was assassinated. The last theatrical performance was held in this theatre the night of April 14, 1865, when the President was shot by John Wilkes Booth. Visitors to Washington have always asked to be shown Ford's Theatre, but as it was used for Government purposes it was only the outside of the building that they saw. Soon after the first of the year the old building will be reopened as a Lincoln museum. It will house the relics of the celebrated Oldroyd collection and many other relics associated with the life of Lincoln.

No man afraid of work has ever gotten very far in the world. The biggest men from the President down, work the longest hours. There will never be a foreman's job awaiting the six-hour day laborer.—Industry and Labor.

WILLIAMSBURG, VIRGINIA

A short run down Duke of Gloucester Street in this Land of Eld will bring the traveler to the site of a vanished capitol. Here Washington once became too embarrassed to reply to a vote of honor accorded by the House of Delegates. One member with a courteous bow assured young Washington that his great courage was exceeded only by his modesty. The Capitol is being rebuilt upon its original foundation.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

BRINGING THE WORLD TO ONE LEVEL

By George B. Lockwood

Three or four years ago, when the great delusion prevailed that the United States was rich enough to put all the rest of the world on a parity, a religious lady declared that it was selfish for the United States to enjoy such prosperity while so much of the rest of the world was in want, and suggested that it was time to begin to "shuck up."

Since that time, through the thimble-rigging of the international bankers, who seem for very practical reasons to have the same idea, we have been financing the rest of the world to the point where a cave-in of our debtors has seriously affected American industry and employment. Now the same type of altruist is crying out against the American government and social system because we are poorer than we used to be, and many Americans have no sufficient means of sustenance.

That is of course a beautiful idea—dividing up with the rest of the world, and bringing the standard of life of Americans down to that of the billion people in the Orient, for instance, who live in filth, poverty and ignorance. By such a redistribution of the wealth of the world, the level of this billion Asiatics would not be raised much, but rather that American case would be greatly degraded.

Now if present conditions in America are to be complained of, what could be said of the situation when Americans are put on a bare subsistence basis, which is the average basis today in about fully three-fourths of the world's population?

The prosperity of America is not something that fell like manna from heaven. Our standards of life have not been attained without labor and sacrifice, without toil and struggle. We have not attained these unique standards at the sacrifice of the well being of other peoples. What logical reason exists for asserting that peoples who have not put forth the effort, or the sacrifice, or the genius that Americans, to what has been achieved in this nation? And how many Americans actually believe that effort should be exerted to pauperize their country and their countrymen, the only possible way in which a common world level can be brought about? How many of those who advocate such a policy are ready to divide up all they have with others less fortunate or successful, to grow good faith? Is Owen D. Young, who preaches this idea, already to begin at home with this "shucking up" program?

Our eight per cent of the world's population cannot lift the remaining 92 per cent to our level. The only possible effect of such an effort would be to degrade the American standard of life, with all it involves of progress beyond the material, to that of Europeans and Asiatics, without helping them.

Liberty and opportunity can come to any people only through their willingness to strive for it.

PLENTY OF REASON FOR STAYING OUT

The clacking of many tongues, attempting to force the United States into the League of Nations, with or without adequate safeguards, goes merrily on. If the United States were a member of the League, they argue, Japan would not dare defy the Council and peace and quiet would reign from the Yalu to the Nonni.

This is not the view taken by Raymond G. Gaztell, veteran European correspondent of the New York Evening Post, dashing from Paris, Carlsbad points out that neither China nor Japan has anything to fear from the League Council, as either of them can vote down any resolution proposed to that body. Then he adds in elucidation of the idea that it is fortunate that the United States is not a member of the League:

"Ambassador Charles G. Dawes * * understands the weaknesses of the League's power, but is keeping a still tongue in his head. His remaining on the sidelines in conformity with the wishes of Washington gives the United States an advantageous position as super-umpire over the whole Far Eastern dispute and arbiter against injustice on either side, the silencer of propaganda with which League sessions abound, and that unknown quantity that can be decisive when the occasion demands."

The principal thing the United States might make, if it were represented on the League Council, would be liable to vote by either Japan or China for or by Great Britain or any other member of the League. Any proposal it makes, as a firstborne power, spinning Warren, Martin Avery, J. L. Higgie and Wm. Van Schoonevan, Florence Smith, Peoria, Sea Gem, Lottie Mason and Fleetwing. The Booth twins, Anderson and Maxwell will lay up here next week.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

By Frank P. Litschert

According to press dispatches from Europe on December 10, Japan and China accepted the League of Nations resolution on the dispute in Manchuria. Even the most ardent friends of the League, however, will hardly claim that the League has come out of the dispute with any great credit to itself. The acceptance of the resolution was made by both countries with important reservations. So far as Japan is concerned, its reservation is important enough to extract any teeth from the resolution which the resolution might originally have possessed. In short, the Japanese reserved the right to take measures against bandits in Manchuria. As this is exactly what Japan has claimed to be doing all the time, it is difficult to see wherein the resolution alters the situation.

The fact is that Japan has won a complete victory in the Manchuria dispute. Taking advantage of world condition, the fact that the great powers of the world were engaged in their own troubles, and taking forth-er advantage of the impotency of the League, Japan started her Manchurian adventure with every prospect of success, and this success has not been denied. Advancing for the stated purpose of protecting Japanese rights in Manchuria, the Japanese army occupied every strategic point of any consequence in the province. Until this was done all appeals from the League and the various powers were made in vain. After Japan had achieved her objective naturally the Japanese were willing to listen to compromise, just as the small boy is always willing to compromise after he has eaten all the jam in the pantry. And so the Japanese agreed to a cessation of hostility, and the withdrawal of Japanese troops as quickly as possible, whatever that means. But the Japs attached the reservation which gives them the right to go bandit hunting, which is exactly what they have been doing, according to their own claims, and so long as there are bandits to hunt it will be impossible to withdraw the troops quickly or otherwise. Indeed it would seem to the impartial observer that the Japanese troops are apt to occupy strategic and controlling points in Manchuria for some time to come.

The result of this Japanese adventure in China has seriously interfered with the prestige of the League and its future effectiveness. All threats of the League were powerless to check the Japanese until the Japanese objective was achieved. The adherents of the League cannot excuse its ineffectiveness by claiming that things would have been different had America been in the League. For the United States as an independent power cooperated with the League, without avail so far.

The League fiasco in connection with the Japanese adventure in Manchuria will furnish opponents of the World Court in the United States Senate with and additional reason for opposing America's adherence to the Court. They will argue that if the League is ineffective against one Asiatic power when all of the nations are unanimous in seeking to checkmate that power, how much greater would the ineffectiveness and confusion be if the League were seeking to coerce some European power which had friends inside and outside the League? The answer to this one is, of course, obvious.

GARY COOPER ON SCREEN AT PALACE SATURDAY

Those who remember Gary Cooper in "The Virginian" will need no further introduction to his talent and personality which will again be seen at the Palace Theatre Saturday and Sunday of this week.

In the photoplay entitled "His Woman" finds Gary in the role of a sailor and after finding a baby adrift he runs into complications when it becomes necessary to love a woman to take care of it.

Clandette Colbert takes the part of this woman and her talent on the screen is not at all displeasing.

Proper Position for Safe Driving

This young lady, posed by Dr. Dudley B. Reed, director of health service, University of Chicago, is showing how the "perfect driver" sits behind the wheel for safety and comfort. Dr. Reed pointed out that mohair velour upholstery, which has a pile surface, grips the clothing and helps maintain proper driving posture.

MOHAIR AN AID TO SAFE DRIVING

In the last eighteen months more persons have been killed in automobile accidents in the United States than our country's wars lost to us during the World war. This is an alarming fact which is receiving the careful attention of public officials everywhere and challenges the thought and action of every citizen. What can be done to reduce this huge death toll?

Safety measures are being effectively applied in many ways but the problem rests largely with the automobile driver. What can be do to further protect himself and others from accidents? Helpful suggestions in this connection have just been offered by Dr. Dudley B. Reed, professor of hygiene and director of the health service of the University of Chicago.

Doctor Reed calls attention to the fact that sitting properly while driving is not only an aid to the person's health but it is a direct help to safety as it places the body where consciousness in suspension is easier, where fatigue that too often promotes carelessness is prevented, and where the driver's vision is best likely to be obscured. It is not difficult to assume the correct sitting position but it is sometimes hard to keep such posture, especially if the automobile seat is covered with a material that causes one's clothing and sliding about. Those difficulties are more easily avoided, Doctor Reed points out, if the seats are upholstered in a fabric like mohair velour or velour, the fibers of which grip the clothing, giving support to the contour of the seat and reducing the tendency to slip and slide.

One of the most common faults in driving, Doctor Reed explains, is to slump down in the seat. This is easy to do if the upholstery is slippery but not so likely to happen on mohair. In a slumped position, the motorist can not quickly respond when an emergency demands quick operation of the controls, his arms and legs are cramped, he frags it, and he has an opportunity to expand and other internal organs are restricted. Most important of all, the spine, nature's own shock absorber, is bent in such a position that shocks and jars strike it at an angle instead of in a vertical plane, as was intended so that the efficiency of the spine is greatly reduced, the person becomes fatigued more easily and is soon in condition that invites accidents.

Here are Doctor Reed's posture suggestions, especially helpful during these vacation months when long automobile drives are taxing the endurance of the motorist. Have the back well against the back of the seat with the weight resting mainly on the seat bones. There should be support for the back at a point below the shoulder blades and at the top of the hips. Do not recline too much, slightly more than ninety degrees is enough and there should be no weight or pressure under the knees. The feet should be able to reach the pedals and the floor without stretching or straining. In this position, which is well illustrated in the accompanying photograph, the driver has the greatest relaxation and freedom of movements, he enjoys the greatest comfort and he is kept in a position where he can most efficiently handle the car in time of danger.

Manxmen mind their manxeses, Dhoolish events on tiniest Britain's minute isle of Man. Manxmen are exclusive judges of all work. They hear petitions and command orders of every sort and preside over Manx grand juries.

Manxmen gathered recently to hear the swearing in of Deemster Drinkwater Moore. A grim and respected veteran of the Manx bench Mr. Moore has been in retirement for ten years. He now has been instituted as sole examiner of wills and of the Isle of Man, upon taking the following sword-filling Manx oath:

"By the wonderful works that that mikenicknicky wrought in heaven and upon the earth and the earth beneath in six days and seven nights I swear to you also the laws of the isle justly between one sovereign lord the king and his lieges and duly execute the law according to the statute doth lie in the midst of the law."

A Manx elder expounded: "The backbone of a lawyer his intelligently—that is without ear, deference or declination to the right or the left—in the line of duty shows Deemster's oath is a constant reminder that keeping was since time the rich food of Manxmen."—Time Magazine.

WAR BETWEEN HUMAN BEINGS AND GERMS GREATEST FIGHT OF AGES

French Scientists Praises U. S. Research Work.

Lille—The greatest war of the ages, according to Dr. Harry Plotz, noted scientist is that being waged between intelligent human beings and germs. Doctor Plotz has just returned here after three months in America, and in addition to being a scientist he is a well-known literary critic associated with the Pasteur Institute.

Specializing in infantile paralysis, smallpox, measles, etc., diseases caused by filtrable viruses, Doctor Plotz expressed great admiration for the intensity of the work in American laboratories directed toward combatting these particular germs.

Doctor Herbert of Cambridge, arrived by to the French scientists, his assisted in isolating the germs of the common cold in canaries and hens; Lennox has proved the possibility of inducing humans with it. If the germ can be proved, which is the next step, it is very probable that an antitoxin will be developed, which in the meantime will prevent or relieve the colds of thousands.

As yet, there seems no answer for infantile paralysis. "We know how to take it and isolate it and infect others with it," he said, referring to the actual germ, "but we do not yet know where it comes from. And we know now that the only practicable action is the human convalescent variety—for example, such as Governor Roosevelt of New York.

GIVING ADVICE AND TAKING IT
By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Emeritus Dean of Men, University of Illinois

Farmer Adams was giving very sage and perhaps sensible advice to Joseph Andrews. Joseph was in love with a young man and wanted to be married today and live happily ever after. But the condition was important for the marriage never-theless. The good parson was urging restraint of desire and emotions and leaving down the principle that ever should never be so in a hurry to get married with anything lesson that he ought not easily bring himself widowed too much disturbing his mental and emotional equilibrium to give up. Joseph did not fall for the principle.

"You are too much inclined to pessimism, child," the parson advised. "God have set your affections so staunchly on this young woman, that if He re-quired her at your hands I fear that you would rebelliously part with her. Now believe me, in Christian ought so to set his heart on any person or thing in this world but that whenever it shall be required or taking from him in any manner by Divine providence he may be able quietly, and content-edly to resign it."

The theory sounded all right, but the preacher had scarcely uttered his advice until a messenger brought him the sad and startling news that his youngest child had run down. Overcome. The news was too much for him and he burst into an agony of grief and indignation. Joseph tried in vain to comfort him with his own philosophy, but to no avail.

"Child, child," he said, "do not so give way to grief. God is love and either of his children I could have borne it with patience."

Very likely, but it is usually a good deal easier to give some one else a piece of your mind than it is to follow it yourself.

I had noticed results," Wisdom me me, "I'll have them not right away."

I wonder if he would.

LOST BALLOONIST APPEARS OUT OF BARREN WASTE IN CANADA

Tells Story of Terrific Battle With Elements.

Saint Ste. Marie, Mich.—Down across Lake Erie and into the wilds of Ontario in a balloon, Alfred Vasek, twenty-five of Cleveland, fought his way through storms and frozen silence, landing in a tree top, to limit him into civilization.

Vasek took off from Cleveland at 8:30 on a Thursday night in a try for a pilot's license, and was not heard from again until the following Monday. It had been feared he had been forced down in Lake Erie on a storm which raged in his path, and search was made of its surface.

Arriving here on his way back to Cleveland Vasek told of being buffeted by the storm, of being sweltering sun by fog, and a desperate fight to avoid being swamped on lake Huron when the balloon settled to the surface of the water almost under.

"I left Cleveland at 8:30 in the evening with the wind blowing toward the northwest at ten miles per hour," Vasek said. "By midnight I was over Edgewater park and all over Lake Erie. I lost my location until I passed over Sarnia at 12:00 a. m. Friday. That was the last time I saw land until I came down six hours later.

"After passing Sarnia, which I recognized by the lake lights, I was above the clouds at 1,000 feet. Fog closed in about me and I had abandoned all conception of direction or speed. Then it started to rain and finally it changed into snow. It was the most terrible thing I ever saw in.

"Sue formed on the rubber. The long baggage on board it was brought low and I continuously lost control in the effort to keep above the clouds. I came down to 1,500 feet and the snow and fog where had formed on the bag fell off. The balloon shot up to thirty feet. From then on I was like a kite, first time coming on the tops of buildings.

Vasek said after hours of buffeting about in the blizzard, he came down through a thousand strata of clouds above the lake, landing in about three feet of water over-night, then came six hours of cross-country hiked.

"As I came down through the clouds I heard a roar below me. I thought it was a train, but when I got into the clouds I found it was waves running on the surface of the lake. I could see no land—nothing but water.

"I was a little scared and let out my drag rope to cut down my speed which was about 30 miles per hour. The rope dragging in the water, pulled the bag down with a slap on the surface and bounced it back into the air like a rubber ball.

"Feeling I would be wrecked I cut the drag rope and the balloon shot up to 15,000 feet in nothing flat."

Vasek then came down through the clouds and saw no sign of islands, was in the middle of the storm-tossed Michigan bay.

"I threw out my two remaining bags of ballast in an effort to get as far inland as possible. I kept losing altitude over the country that was the most cold-hearted I have ever seen. The basket struck a tree, and then strokes about eleven minutes were required to get down. I climbed down the bag hung quite a time with the basket about six feet from the ground. I cut the basket cords with my knife.

"I spent all of Friday there and slept that night in the basket. It was cold. Along about three o'clock in the morning I heard something outside. I looked out and saw what I first thought was a polar dog. I called, thinking the mother would be near. It turned toward me and I saw it was a wolf.

"The next day I walked and walked. Night came on. I struggled along in the darkness and into the next day, finally, sometimes literally swimming and stumbling. Then below me I saw a road. I struggled down to it and fell exhausted. A farmer picked me up and took me to his home in Dollar Corner, Alfred River. I stayed there overnight, when my mother in the morning and I came on my way to Detroit.

Vasek, clearly suffering from exhaustion and frozen and a wrenched leg, said he felt fine and had suffered no serious ill effects.

Airplane Birth Raises New and Knotty Problems

Whitney, Ind.—Aviation has given rise to many new problems and the latest one is not the least. This is it: If a child is born in an airplane flying between two points, where should the birth be registered? Or supposing the airplane is flying over an intercontinental boundary, how can it be said within country it was born in?

The attorney general of Manitoba, W. J. Major, who confronted with this problem in a most unexpected way, for to improve Manitoba as a province for airplane travel, Some time ago a child was born in a plane while the mother was being rushed to a hospital at the Pas.

News of the event reached Belgrade through the newspapers. Legal authorities there were designing how to deal with just such situations. They decided to consult Mr. Major, and Mr. Major has a letter from the minister of the present result of appeals at Brussels asking what penalty was given in the birthplace. He thought the airborn a home would be the logical place, but wanted to make sure.

The letter tells authorities to use his discretion in determining the airborn's legal citizen at airplanes may be in at the time of a birth in the air.

STEADY NERVE OF MOUNTAIN GOATS

Not Easily Alarmed, and Expert Climbers.

Long before Conifer pass was thought of as a path, I scanned the old goat trail that zigzag up on to the wheel range the Mission ridge of the main old Stehekin-Entiat trail, by Vernon Darling, author of "Mountain Memories." That trail from Doubtful lake to Conifer standing close against the range of the great Cascade glacier peaks.

Suddenly a mountain goat took my attention. Some the best trail I was listening and found it on a ledge of the open rising. Some hours the goat clear as noon of the Doubt basin and immediately above the slope of the mountain in a serious manner. It stood the goat's head, with its long beard, and its ears pricked forward, as if it were listening for some sound. I think the family circle would be happier. "The trouble is that too much work kills many members of a family," he said, "and the remaining members are constantly stunned by the shock."

"You a lot of men are like a friend of mine who started to write a letter to me with a load of trouble. As he stood gnawing over them his wife remarked:

"'That's all very fine for you but you don't have to write the letter.'

"'Yes, but the way you get before we answer.'

"'In that case,' answered the husband, 'I think I'll just tear it up.'"

Mountain goats and mountain sheep seem to be almost fond of each other's companionship, especially in old age. A mountain goat, at the top, some of a dry study on the Brazos mining formation, and the mountain sheep is investigate. But when he laid himself with a grunt on which some feet of the herbage, a chorus of hisses and bleats informed him he was intruding on a rendezvous reserved for the sheeps for long enjoyment, satisfying the fun. Report soon.

Coins of Yellow Metal "Minted" in California

Five seventy pieces gold half-dollars and quarter dollars were issued 18 California. The half dollar of the first issue was struck, the obverse showing a head of Liberty surrounded by thirty-seven 37 stars and the reverse showing the date "1852" with a wreath of oak and the legend, "Half Dol. California Gold." Beneath the on the reverse the date and the legend, "California Gold 1852 D." Let the issues show various numbers of stars or with the date and the legend portraying an Indian head in profile of Liberty and standing figure of Liberty, with various designs.

These half and quarter dollars were issued by private companies in Individuals connected with the gold mining business, and by assayers, and were received the standard of value, weight and fineness declared by the coins. While not considered legal tender at full value, they were accepted at a fixed value there were a pressing need for money with which to transact the business of the country. Such coinage, however, is now prevented by existing laws.

Numerous pieces resembling the gold half dollars were also issued during the period. They were made of composition metal, gold plated, and of course had no gold value. The coins were much in demand at the time, and were often counterfeited. Specimens of the genuine coins are now very rare.

THE MACHINE AGE SPOILS A PROPHECY

By H. L. RUSSELL

Advisory Council, Agricultural Committee, American Bankers Association

A 20TH century statistician, limited to thirty years ago that by 1931 all available wheat land in the world would be under cultivation and it was predicted that the population would not be increasing beyond that which then existed. The average yield that year was 12.7 bushels per acre, implying the need seven years, the world over, to buy bread. In the 30's—

—the increase was 2,500,000 acres in cultivation this decrease would amount to almost a half billion bushels, or one-quarter of what the world standards of thirty years ago. Its place of slow decrease or shortage we have had five successive dry years in the Canadian Northwest, and in the Argentine and Australia, the two chief exporting countries, there has been a succession of droughts. Whether farmers have shown any great inclination to curtail materially their output, perhaps a 10% decline compared with 1931 reduction in steel. This unwillingness, or perhaps inability, to adjust production to current needs makes the problem of the hard-hit so acute.

Not only are we now growing more wheat per unit of land, but science has been very greatly stimulated, in twenty years Canada has increased acreage 250%, Australia almost as much, and the Argentine has in the materially increased use of tractors. A much more thoroughgoing use has been developed. More scientific seed fields are used than formerly. The reduction of 1.3 bushels consumed per person per annum since the last generation necessitates nearly 100,000,000 bushels less wheat than was formerly required.

Machines Increase Supply

The factor that has exerted the most potent influence in the ruling world food of grain has been the rapid development of the machine. The old days of the cradle reversed from thirty to forty hours of hand labor to harvest an acre of grain. Then came the binder, which reduced the process to four or five hours per acre. Now the combine does the work in forth-five minutes per acre.

Where it used to cost ten cents a bushel merely to thresh the grain, the modern combine cuts and threshes at once, ranging from 3 to 6 cents a bushel. With this reduced cost of production, the possibility of acreage expansion is tremendous. Lands now inferior regarded as worthless except for grazing have relatively come into competition with the other wheat lands.

The Russian Effort

Within the past two or three years another disturbing element has come into the picture. Soviet Russia is attempting a colossal thing, and the possibility that it may yet be fully evaluated. Russia is eagerly utilizing the very latest of scientific knowledge to enhance her agricultural possibilities. With few exceptions she is literally pouring millions into the expansion of her agricultural resources in efficient, experimental stations and breeding farms. Her scientists are combing the earth for new grains and new methods. No money in Europe is manifesting more interest and activity in seeing what of the time science, wherever it may be found.

It is of more than passing interest that the wheat yields reported in the same must farm known as the "Giant" ran last year as much as 18 bushels to the acre. Its total farm for the crop harvested is reported to have been 2,845,000 bushels, a yield from 47,000 acres under government control and mechanical as fast as human energy can be applied in a new farm in the world's prairie.

There can be but little doubt that the Russian situation is one of present quite a different attitude from what obtained even in pre-war days.

Bankers Hold Farm Conference

A "factory membership" was held in a state bank at Pendle, South Dakota, attended by fifty farmers. The conference discussed the feeding of low price wheat and barley and marketing it through livestock. Later, bankers on the feeding of wheat were distributed among the farmers, and a feeder's column was opened in the local paper each week.

We have had more success with the conference and with the feeders column in the local paper, than with any other undertaking we have tried," the bankers said. "As a result there is about three times as much livestock being fed out in our territory than ever before. We plan to hold many similar conferences the coming year."

The benefits of sterilization must be cause of the capital accumulated by those who have gone before. Through accumulation of capital our great railroads have been constructed, our public utilities have been built and our cities, office buildings and homes have arisen.

NEW MAN-MADE FUR MOHAIR CREATION

New Process Announced by Pioneer New England Textile Mills.

Sanford, Maine. — (Special) — Successful development of a "man-made fur" from mohair fibers is announced by a new weaving process has just been announced by officials of Sanford Mills, new headquarters of the American mohair industry and the oldest fifty cents mile of the invention of the world's first power loom for weaving mohair by the late George Goodall.

The new fabric is called "Kosengora," Maine it closely resembles fur in appearance and in other characteristics. It is not an imitation, but has a distinctive process and character of its own. It is to be used for the manufacture of men's winter and outdoor coats and wide demand for the garments is predicted as a result of the favorable reception of the few garments already introduced to the consumer.

L. C. Chase & Co., of Boston, selling agents for Sanford Mills, have announced that they have appointed M.

A "Koengora" The New "Man-Made Fur" Coat Made From the Fleece of the Angora Goat

Wise & Co., of Buffalo, N. Y., as exclusive manufacturers and distributors of the coats in four large cities.

In addition to the new weaving process the development of "Koengora" opens up an important outlet for quantities of mohair now finding a limited market in the form of plushes, velvets and upholstering fabrics. It provides the service of an entirely new fabric and welcome an interesting new field for the mohair industry in general as well as a source of additional outlet for quantities of unsalable fleece.

IF PREDICTIONS of a lower level of health and a higher tuberculosis rate among Michigan young people, caused by present-day living conditions, come true, it will not be because Professor Wessman has not travelled far enough and wide enough over Michigan to teach boys and girls how to be healthy.

Dr. Minthorn Thompson, Kansas Indian, which sends Wessman to Michigan schools, reports that in the three and one-half years she has been at work, more than 75,000 school children have heard her Indian health stories. In that time she has been in all except two of the state's 83 counties.

Grade schools as well as high school students delight to hear Wessman's legends, all of her carrying valuable health lessons for the listener. The programs are given entirely without cost to the schools, being financed by funds secured by the December seals of tuberculosis Christmas seals.

The work of Professor Wessman is but one of the methods used by the Michigan Tuberculosis Association to promote health among children. Posters, bulletins, leaflets and other health supplies are distributed widely in city, village, and rural schools. During the past twelve months alone, 48,000 copies of a leaflet entitled "Foods for Growing Boys and Girls" have been given to children of Michigan.

Added health work among children, to effect results in the fight for the eradication of disease, is planned by the Michigan Tuberculosis Association for 1932. The extent of this work will be determined entirely by funds realized 12 the Christmas seal sale, in progress at the present time.

Trace Respiratory Diseases to Dust

According to prominent health authorities, at least 70% of the present state diseases gain entrance in the body through the respiratory tract. Dr. E. V. Hill, America's leading authority on air-conditioning, states: "While some of these infections may be from moisture droplets from the mouth and nose, still the great majority are caused by dust particles of some kind gaining entrance to the tract with their ever-present infecting organisms." Because of their efficiency as a means for washing indoor air, modern home air-conditioning systems make it possible to have cleaner and more healthful air indoor than is obtainable outdoors.

DID YOU EVER STOP TO THINK?
By Edson R. Waite

That what most business concerns with for most is for more frequent visits from their customers. It takes frequent visitors to build better business.

The way to get frequent visits is to advertise goods and service that give perfect satisfaction.

Modern customers who are persistent advertisers are usually the ones who sell the best in quality—the kind that gives more and better service.

Well-advertised quality is the kind that looks and acts the part.

Wise business concerns never cut down advertising to cut down expenses. They increase advertising to increase business.

Winners in the race for better business keep ahead by going after business aggressively all the time; they never take any resting periods. No business can stop advertising and prosper.

There is desirable business for those concerns who go after it and stay after it, through advertising.

The selling of merchandise or service is best, done by an organized combination of quality, service and advertising.

Advertising makes it easier to do a volume business. The driving force of advertising drives business in.

YOUTH IS WHAT YOU THINK—NOT HOW OLD YOU ARE

Youth is not a time of life—it is a state of mind. It is not a matter of ripe cheeks, red lips and supple knees; it is a matter of the will, a quality of the imagination, a vigor of the emotions; it is a freshness of the deep springs of life.

Youth means a temperamental predominance of courage over timidity, of the appetite of adventure over love of ease. This often exists in a man of fifty more than in a boy of twenty.

Nobody grows old by merely living a number of years; people grow old only by deserting their ideas. Years wrinkle the skin, but to give up enthusiasm wrinkles the soul. Worry, doubt, self-distrust, fear and despair—these are the long, long years that bow the head and turn the growing spirit back to dust.

Whether seventy or sixteen, there is in every being's heart the love of wonder, the sweet amazement at the stars and the starlike things and thoughts, the undaunted challenge of events, the unfailing childlike appetite for what next, and the joy and the game of life.

You are as young as your faith, as old as your doubt; as young as your self-confidence, as old as your fear; as young as your hope, as old as your despair.

In the central place of your heart there is a wireless station; so long as it receives messages of beauty, hope, cheer, courage, grandeur and power from the earth, from men and from the Infinite, so long are you young.

When the antennae are all down and all the central place of your heart is covered with the snows of pessimism and the ice of cynicism, then are you grown old indeed and may God have mercy on your soul.—Exchange.

The street car conductor's change was running short. A young mother with an infant in her lap handed him a half dollar.

Conductor: "Is that the smallest you have?"

HAMILTON ADMIRERS PUT STAMP OF HIGH APPROVAL ON DRAMA

During the filming of "Alexander Hamilton" the Warner Bros. picture starring George Arliss, which comes to the Palace Theatre Saturday and Sunday next, representatives of patriotic, cultural and educational clubs literally ombarded the studio with questions, suggestions and warnings. Alexander Hamilton is so much a part of the American heritage as these are many grands of the great Washington, Jefferson or Lincoln, and tradition who wish to be assured that no injustice is done to the memory of the first Secretary of the Treasury. After seeing the script of the play—which was written by George Arliss and Mary Hamlin—the local chapter of the Daughters of the Revolution and other societies expressed themselves as highly pleased.

The play deals with the human side of the character of the fiery political leader, and with susceptibility to feminine whiles. Mr. Arliss gives a portrayal as flashing as Disraeli, "Old English," or that other modern American character in "The Millionaire."

R. B. Armstrong Jr., who has been with his parents, Dr. and Mrs. R. B. Armstrong over the Christmas holiday season returns to Chicago Saturday.

STATE RECEIVES INCOME THROUGH LANDS SOLD

Within the past 18 months the state has received an income of $125,207 through lands sold by the Department of Conservation, it was announced by the Lands Division, which has charge of administering approximately 2,200,000 acres of public domain.

The income was received through the sale of 45,977 acres and 2,000 city lots.

In addition to selling the state owned lands, 37 rights-of-way were granted. They had an aggregate area of 8,500 acres.

The department spent $190,000 during the 18 months period from the Game Protection Fund for the purchase of 46,300 acres of land to be used for game refuge and public hunting lands purposes.

The Lands Division during the year also effected the exchange of 13,285 acres of land within state forests and game refuges for 12,960 acres of isolated state owned lands. Most of the lands obtained in forests and game refuges in the blocking out processes are obtained through exchange, the state giving lands it does not need for lands already within its organized projects.

THE NEW YEAR

With this issue of the Sentinel we say farewell to the year just closing and bid hail to the New Year. In this we say farewell without regret, but rather in a mood of rejoicing, feeling, as we do, as though we are leaving behind us a slough of remorse and despondency that overhangs the world, and that we are entering the new year with pronounced evidence of the return of more healthy and prosperous conditions for everyone, than at any time within the past decade.

May the New Year make recompense for the past and add a full measure of pleasure, contentment and prosperity.

SELECTIONS BY CHOIR THOROUGHLY ENJOYED

The many expressions of congratulation and praise from the large audience that heard the choir render selections from Handel's, "The Messiah", express the success of the service. Only five solos and five choruses of that great oratorio were used. The solos "He shall feed His flock," "Rejoice greatly, O Daughter of Zion," and "How Beautiful Are the feet of them" were rendered by Mrs. Archie Livingston. Dr. F. Wilkinson rendered the tenor solo, "Comfort ye my people" and Mr. Albert W. Rider the baritone solo, Thus saith the Lord." The pleasing manner in which the solos were rendered had much to do with the success of the production. When we realize how well the service was received we are pleased to announce that all performers were paid people. We wish to thank those who are not regularly connected with our choir for the parts they played in the service. We are indebted to Dr. F. Wilkinson, Loran Hart, Walter Miles, Mr. and Mrs. Belding, Mrs. Clinton Cooper and Miss Frances Milner, for their willingness to assist us. As the service came during the holidays several students home from their colleges work helped us. Gilbert Saltonstall, Lola Fessenden, and Helen Parker. Mrs. Gladys Dean at one piano and Gwendolyn Miller at the organ helped greatly in making the program possible. We cannot overlook the splendid work of the director, Mrs. Steiter. With a real that seemed limitless and facing difficulties that many would never have tried to surmount she directed the large chorus to success.

SPEARING THROUGH ICE SEASON OPENS TONIGHT BUT WHERE'S THE ICE'

The winter season for spearing through the ice on Michigan's inland lakes and most of its streams opens at midnight, Thursday, December 31. The season will remain open through January and February.

Last year spearing was permitted only on the inland lakes during the period "when the lakes were frozen over." Through a change made by the 1931 legislature only two months of winter spearing is permitted.

It is unlawful to use an artificial light in spearing on either lakes or streams.

The following species may be taken with a spear during January and February: Carp, suckers, mullet, redhorse, sheepshead, lake trout, smelt, pike, great northern, grass pike or pickerel muskellunge, whitefish, cisco, pikefish or menominee, whitefish, dogfish and garpike.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE MAJOR REVENUE PRODUCER

Although few citizens realize that the Department of State is one of Michigan's major revenue producing agencies, department records show that $51,493,376 were collected for the first eleven months of 1931.

Among the outstanding highlights of the past year is the fact that with 66 building and loan associations with assets of $165,269,940 operating in Michigan under the supervision of the department, not one of those associations closed its doors because of adverse economic conditions. Indications are that all will "come through" in fine shape.

The gasoline tax was the biggest revenue producer of the department, $22,040,367 being collected during the first eleven months of 1931. Motor vehicle weight taxes took second place with $20,182,895. From corporation privilege and franchise taxes the department turned $7,053,956 in to the treasury. The new operators' and chauffeurs' license law yielded $772,553 while the old law, in effect for but a few months last spring produced $22,051.

From the malt tax the state received $568,173, all of which by law must be used to pay the state's share of caring for tuberculars. The automobile title division collected $488,321, while licensing of private detectives yielded $2,000. Department investigators added $116,124 to the state's revenues through enforcement of laws regarding use of foreign license plates and compelling truck owners to pay proper fees on the correct weights of their vehicles, and $76,522 from malt tax enforcement.

Calling on New Year's Morning

THE young matron was looking back over some old magazines shortly before the holidays, when she ran across a picture showing an old-fashioned New Year's day reception. A great steaming bowl of hot fruit punch stood on the table and on either end either a pot of hot coffee. New Year's callers stood about, with glasses and cups held in their outstretched hands, wishes and toasts for the New Year.

"Well, it is pretty, friendly custom that was" she exclaimed to her sister-in-law, "and I wish we could have it back that is dead out! Watching the old year out with a dance party, and then how nice to welcome the New Year in on the afternoon of the day itself. With all one's visiting friends coming to share it with one."

"Well, why not start the custom," suggested her tired sister-in-law. "Let's send out a general alarm that

The years end is a time for quiet thought and a forgetting of things that beyond redemption, but with the passing of the year comes the inexplicable urge to keep ever fresh and buoyant the human soul and make radiant with the purity of the unknown future.

The old year, like from our hands like the stem of a rose whose leaves, one by one, month by month, have silently dropped away into the void of time, some taken with the fragrance of pleasant memories, some with the pallid tints and withered aspects of disappointments and griefs unexpected and irreparable and some with dust of the highway of living, resolutely, real, but, at the birth of another New Year, time brings to the hands of each of us a fresh bud, fresh in promise, the secrets of whose three-folded leaf are for us to reveal through the petals of wishing fulness. Yet within the heart of each bud are the sweet and inspiring promises of the hopes and aspirations of the human breast, of hidden joys that hold from coming of full blossoming, of good deeds to be done for our fellow men, of the blessings of peace, good will and contentment, of the unselfish desire for us, and of the gardens of opportunity that for us are ever changing wide open for us.

It may be that that guides the hand of Time in placing in our grasp the new bud of promise, for each of us may do much to hasten its proper blossoming, to keep fresh its fragrance, to shape into fruition the enjoyment of the unfolding months by month, and day by day, of the flower of the year whose unopened petals nestle before us.—Kansas City Star.

Future Is Ours

Amid all the scenes of talk about the New Year, one great fact remains. The future is not past, beyond our attraction, but the future is always just ahead, and it is ours.—Collier's Weekly.

Old Time New Year's

IT SEEMS strange to remember that before the 42nd war there was to real country dance, casual social gatherings. Men and young women of grandsires and the several hours playing games as well as in the corn husk, or husking bee, or apple bee, but the invariable feature of each gathering was the dance. Fiddlers were always in demand for every party, and the fiddler was a person of importance. Usually he was a local character, and he was always welcome. Sometimes he was a traveling musician, who made a circuit of the country, playing for dances at regular intervals. Such a fiddler was Uncle Ephraim Hall, who lived in the Connecticut valley. He was a familiar figure at all the country dances for many years, and he was always welcome. He was a short, fat man, with a round, good-natured face, and he was a famous character in his way. He was a good fiddler, and he knew it. He was also a good story teller, and he knew that, too. He was a welcome guest at every house in the valley, and he was always sure of a good dinner and a night's lodging when he was on his way to or from a dance. He was a bachelor, and he had no home of his own, but he was never lonely. He was a great favorite with the children, and they were always glad to see him coming. He was a jolly, good-natured man, and he was always ready for a good time. He was a great favorite with the young people, and he was always sure of a good time when he was with them. He was a great favorite with the old people, and he was always sure of a good time when he was with them. He was a great favorite with the whole community, and he was always sure of a good time when he was with them.

The Happy Day.

well hold open house all afternoon. All right," agreed the young matron enthusiastically. "I'll have a big bowl of that wonderful orange tea punch on tap and Mary can make some of her amusing little Swedish decorated cookies to go with it. You know she makes snappy little wafers on which she puts lighted candles, cranberry trees and crimson winter berries, all in colored icing. Then you can have a table of cigars and cigarettes in one corner of the sun room, for the men who want to smoke.

"Well, invite the entire neighborhood all by telephone, of course, and just have a regular old-fashioned New Year's call tomorrow. We can start the custom this year and then perhaps keep it up every year, and possibly some of the others will follow suit. I think it is too bad to lose sight of those old-time customs of entertaining. We have revived the custom of Christmas caroling as well as the waits, and sing Christmas carols through the snowy streets on Christmas eve, and it seems to me it is just as nice to have Christmas trees now. Why not add the revival and fashion of calling on New Year's day?"

WELCOME NEW YEAR

LITTLE New Year at the gate,
Come you in, the night is late;
Come you in and share our cheer;
Candles gleam, and fires burn clear.
Welcome, welcome, dear New Year!

Little New Year at the Door,
Linger in the cold no more.
Come you in, the feast is here;
Come you in to comrades dear.
Welcome, welcome, glad New Year.

Tiny Island Is First to Greet the New Year

Two hundred shepherds and fishermen on the Chatham Islands, 414 miles southeast of New Zealand, welcome in the New Year while Europe and America are still winding up the business of 1931.

The tiny colony in the southern Pacific will be the first place in the world to greet 1932. When the bell in the little church on Hanson island peals out at midnight, the bells of Westminster abbey in London will be ringing noon.

The Chatham Islands lie near the starting point of time to see the New Year born. The international date line, an arbitrary line made necessary by the invention of the calendar, is drawn in such a way that it lies always in the ocean, is the starting point of every day. The islands lie just to the east of this line.

From the islands the New Year speeds westward at 1,000 miles an hour along the equator. By the time it reaches New York, the islanders will be thinking about their New Year's day supper.

The New Leaf

By CHARLES F. WADSWORTH

KENTON MARSAVE sat in a big red leather chair in his club looking over the evening paper.

As he finished and folded it up to replace on the table, his eye caught the cartoon on the front page. It was of a little Santa representing the New Year turning a leaf of a big book. At the top of the page was "January 1," and the rest of the page was blank except for a question mark in the center.

Marsave looked at it momentarily and tossed the paper aside.

"A new leaf!" he said to himself contemptuously. "Phooey!"

Waiting in the lobby, he looked down upon the street. He seemed restless. He frequently spoke to him and wished him a happy New Year but returned an unenthusiastic reply—almost surly.

Smiling himself, again he took up the paper and looked down the list. The paper lay across his knee as he sank into a thoughtful reverie.

"People make a big fuss about turning over a new leaf at New Year's," he mused. "What's the use? Why should I turn over a new leaf? I am just a wheelbarrow in a chest; you can seem to respect me, and I try to do others as I would have them do unto me. Gone by."

He rose to the last part of his soliloquy to greet some friends that, a while before, he had been perhaps into his mind.

There was LaLand, his bookkeeper, whom he had criticized exactingly for omitting to put bills last week; he had taken the omission seriously as a word, but Marsave had learned later that LaLand's wife had been ill and it had been necessary for him to be at home for a week. But LaLand had not been given a chance to explain, thought to have done so, I suppose.

There, too, was Dr. Hardy, who cleaned his office. He had bawled her out for a morning neglect. She had

MAY ADD ANOTHER MONTH TO YEAR

NEW Year's day, when the calendar sends us into personal reforms of the old year, is the time to appreciate the time to be reminded that there is a steady trend toward reform of the calendar in all.

Sooner or later we shall abandon the absurd system of twelve months, and divide the year into thirteen months of twenty-eight days each. The new month would be put in between June and July. The old year would have also an extra day, an intercalary day, at the end of June.

The best reason for believing that this plan will eventually be adopted is that business interests want it. Time units are highly important to the daily management of business. By our eccentric calendar, days and weeks, big days come at irregular intervals, and statistics comparing one month's business with another's are often deceptive.

Good Chance Now to Improve Herds

Cost of Well-Bred Stock Invites Investment by Breeders

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture and Kansas State Agricultural College.)

There is an excellent time to replace inferior bulls or females with well-bred stock, says R. W. Sheets, of the United States Department of Agriculture. It is now possible to buy the best at prices which are but little above the usual commercial values of two or three years ago. In fact, there is far less spread as a rule between the best and inferior breeding stock than formerly and there are cases where pure breds are to be had at bargain prices.

The farm production of beef calves for market is being practised in many sections throughout the eastern states as well as in the corn belt, in connection with general farming or other stock raising, says Mr. Sheets. Farmers with ample pasture and an income from the sale of cream have been induced to add a few Shorthorn, Hereford or Aberdeen Angus cows. Others run spring calves with their dams during the summer, fatten them during the fall and feed well from the best spring to fat yearlings.

A more recent practice is the feeding of well-bred spring calves with grain from the time they are weaned. If all until ready to be weaned in slaughter condition in early fall. This system produces more beef of choice quality than any other plan known to the industry. Calves fattened in this manner usually meet the latest market demand for lighter beef, which is sold in hands-weight packages. This system, however, calls for carefully selected breeding stock and for early maturity and high quality.

Economical Ration in Wintering Beef Calves

Wintering beef calves is important in Nebraska, says Mr. Sheets. Alfalfa grounds corn fodder as part of the ration has been under test two years. For the second consecutive year ground corn fodder, full feed, supplemented with one pound daily of cottonseed cake, proved to be the most economical ration in wintering the beef calves. With ground corn fodder valued at $13 a ton, alfalfa hay $10 a ton and shelled corn 42 cents a bushel, the calves making corn fodder and cottonseed meal produced gains at a cost of $4.81 for each 100 pounds gain, as compared to $5.40 per 100 pounds when allowed alfalfa, full feed, and shelled corn, three pounds a day. Although the latter ration was the more profitable, the former was more economical.

Good Time to Build Soil

None of us apparently are stunning anything when we plant cover crops to put in which feed the coming season to insure the most profit during the period of growth, says the thrifty Illinois Shopper. The pasty dreams of that day were of feeding that crop on a double unit, and also of a material cut in half. Instead, we have neither in quality, often displaying long trains of thrifty weeds in the fall and winter. Whether the material was white or some of the reds, pinks or blues, they were lovely creations.

The men were busy making a thing and the boys were busy getting angled their pocketbooks, but it was conceded by all that the boys were not on such a thousand miles, spending New Year's eve all by myself—thinking I had the perfect right to go home and beg I am not to my own testimony!

HOW WILL WOMEN VOTE NEXT YEAR?

Political leaders are already beginning to wonder how the women voter is going to figure in the next Presidential election. What issues is she going to consider paramount? And how far is she going to be satisfied with mere political platitudes in dealing with economic questions?

This is a subject which is wrinkling many a legislative brow, and there are almost as many opinions on the subject as there are politicians in Washington.

It didn't occur to anybody to ask the women themselves—not until a very clever woman politician of experience came along, in the person of Mrs. Anna Simon Richardson, director of the Good Citizenship Bureau. Mrs. Richardson gathered together a party of eleven prominent women leaders and asked them to put down their ideas as to the matters which would likely to influence and interest women voters next fall.

By an overwhelming vote, her jury indicated that the outstanding campaign issue for women voters will be—Unemployment.

All other problems will be considered as secondary by American women, even world peace, tariffs, foreign debts and similar old standbys. These matters will get attention only as they appear to affect the main item. Prohibition will hardly be considered by women in casting their ballots—only one of the eleven jurywomen even deigned to mention it.

Ida M. Tarbell, the literary member of the symposium, prescribes tariff revision as the primary economic need, not only of America but of the whole world, and she insists that tariff legislation is an important part of the treatment for depression and unemployment.

Ruth Pratt and Ruth Bryan Owen, the two Congressional jurywomen, insist that party platforms must deal directly with the unemployment question. "It is a problem of vital national importance," says Mrs. Pratt.

The remaining members of the jury, whose opinions have just been published as a study syllabus for 2,500,000 women, were mostly officers of the great women's clubs and federations. "Women's growing power as voters creates obligation to share constructively in the legislative program to remedy unemployment," says Belle Sherwin, president of the League of Women Voters. "Women voters have the right to demand that party platforms shall present a sound economic program," declares Mrs. G. M. Bowman, president of the Federation of Professional Women.

As far as the women are concerned, then, the great issue of 1932 is apparently bound to be economic. Nothing is regarded as really important except the remedies for unemployment, and the political platform which satisfies the women voters must contain sound and constructive proposals for dealing with the situation which exists today.

INSURANCE AGAINST DEPRESSION

Under the so-called Swope plan for organizing American industry against future depressions, a standard pension scheme is suggested, which is now being widely discussed by spokesmen for both capital and labor.

This pension plan is not charity. The employe contributes one per cent of his earnings from his weekly pay envelope. The company contributes a like sum. The amounts contributed are calculated on a basis of what would be required to retire the worker at the age of 70 on half pay. The fund is to be invested to earn five per cent, compounded semi-annually.

Under Mr. Swope's plan, the company's contributions to the pension fund must be at least one percent of the worker's wage, but never more than $50 a year. The company matches the workers' payments equally if the worker is 35 years of age or younger. Employees who have passed that age must make up the difference necessary to retire them on half-pay at 70.

The worker is also protected, under the Swope plan, by life insurance, disability insurance, and a workmen's compensation insurance. He shares with the company the cost of the insurance premiums, assuming the differential if he is over 35.

General James G. Harbord discusses the Swope plan at considerable length in the current issue of the American Magazine, urging the necessity of immediate steps for the stabilization of industry and employment. "Obviously the unemployment problem demands a solution," he insists. "The Swope Plan proposes a method of controlling business consumption, and a plan for stabilizing employment and ending depressions for all time.

"We call this the Machine Age. It is the age of steel and dynamos, of new-found sources of power harnessed to newly contrived machines. It moves swiftly, in the last half-century we have seen it work so many miracles in transportation, communication and industry that the whole character of our lives has been changed.

"But now a world-wide economic depression has brought the triumphant march of the Machine Age to a pause. Several millions of able-bodied men and women lost their jobs. Of the 49 million persons gainfully employed in the United States, ten per cent faced this winter without hope of regular employment, through no fault of theirs, but because of forces over which they had no control. While granaries in the west are bursting with wheat that cannot be sold, millions are short of food."

General Harbord's support of the Swope plan is given in thought-provoking terms, and he contrives to dramatize the most important problem which confronts the American people today.

IF HINDENBURG SHOULD COME TO U. S.

Congressman Ross A. Collins of Mississippi was applauded by the House of Representatives a few days ago when he made the statement that the President should be prevailed upon "to send an invitation to the President of Germany to visit the United States himself or to send a representative. At the present time," continued Representative Collins, "President Von Hindenburg is the one great remaining bulwark against extremists' excesses in Germany."

The suggestion that President Hindenburg should visit the United States was put forward earlier in the month by Doctor H. F. Vollhehr, the famous German scholar who brought the original Gutenberg Bible and three thousand books printed prior to 1501 to the United States and placed them in the Congressional Library in Washington.

The interest in the matter in Congress when Representative Collins discussed the visits that were made by the Foreign Ministers of France, Italy and Great Britain to Washington, was to have been expected, as the new methods by which the heads of foreign Governments are meeting and talking over their problems, has already won the approval of the people of the entire World. Mr. Collins emphasized his belief, in this kind of diplomacy, and asserted that "an invitation to President Von Hindenburg would be most pleasing to the American citizens of German extraction, most acceptable to the Germans themselves, and serve as a prelude to a finer understanding and sympathy in the conduct of international relations."

President Von Hindenburg at 85 years of age, still towers head and shoulders above most rulers of European countries. The German president is the last survivor of the giants of the World War, and he has proved himself perhaps a mightier leader in peace than in war.

Those who are urging him to take an American trip, for the purpose of discussing with the American government all the complex problems of war debts, reparations and world depressions are confident that he would win a tremendous following in the United States. "I believe," says Dr. Vollhehr, famous German scholar and associate of Einstein, "that Americans would give Hindenburg such a rousing welcome as the world has not witnessed for a long, long time."

Professor Vollhehr's assertion regarding the international situation growing out of the World War will be thoroughly endorsed by most Americans: "Nothing is settled, until it's settled right." But a visit from Hindenburg will help to achieve such a settlement, he cannot come too soon.

NEW IDEAS IN HOUSE WARMING

Here's something new under the sun. A revolutionary idea for indoor heating is being tested in Pittsburgh. It depends on a sort of collaboration between electricity and the human body —the latter being itself a pretty good heat generator.

Everybody knows that the normal temperature of the human body is above 98 degrees, and that it is constantly throwing off heat. Cold walls absorb this heat, as they absorb the heat from a stove or radiator. Therefore, the scientists suggest, why not warm the walls?

The new plan is to give the rooms an electrically heated "skin", that is, a surface containing small electric heating elements. According to the Woman's Home Companion, the individual sections forming this heated wall are exactly like ordinary wall and ceiling material, so far as appearance is concerned. But here is what happens:

"All the heat comes from the walls and ceiling. The entire surface may be warmed, or the heat merely switched on section by section where it will do the most good. These walls do not glow like a grate or become hot to the touch like steam pipes. They radiate a mild temperature almost exactly equal to that of the human body, and feel barely warm to the touch."

So far the method is experimental. Indeed, no form of electrical heating has yet been made practical for the ordinary home. But there can be little question that sooner or later electricity, already man's chief servant, "will be commonly used to keep homes warm in winter and cool in summer.

1932 IS 1933'S "LAST YEAR"

The New Year, whether it be represented in our imaginations as an infant in swaddling clothes or an infant strutting forth in very grown up and sophisticated attire, still represents to all of us in common New Opportunity. After all, what a blessed thing is a new start: a "putting off the old for the new." It was surely wisely written that we should live not in the past but for today and tomorrow.

That word tomorrow is a potent one. Yet it has been abused by the generations. Too many of us undoubtedly have unnecessarily sad and gloomy thoughts, do unnessarily unfortunate things TODAY, believeing all the while that TOMORROW we shall think and do differently. We forget the ever new fact that TODAY is YESTERDAY'S TOMORROW.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

By FRANK P. LITSCHERT

In dwelling on the world-wide depression and the national emergency it has brought to the people of the United States, President Hoover said in his recent message to Congress:

"Many vital changes and movements of vast proportions are taking place in the economic world. The effect of these changes upon the future cannot be seen clearly as yet. Of this, however, we are sure: our system, based upon the ideals of individual initiative and of equality of opportunity, is not an artificial thing. Rather it is the outgrowth of the experience of America, and expresses the faith and spirit of our people. It has carried us in a century and a half to leadership of the economic world.

"If our economic system does not match our highest expectations at all times, it does not require revolutionary action to bring it into accord with any necessity that experience may prove. It has successfully adjusted itself to changing conditions in the past. It will do so again. * * *

The mobility of our institutions, the richness of our resources and the abilities of our people enable us to meet them unafraid."

This observation on the American system, based on our constitutional government is a very timely one. In these days of great trouble and stress we are hearing a great deal about the "break-down" of the modern economic system and of the American constitutional government. As usual in times of great doubt there are agitators abroad in the land and so-called leaders suggesting an entire change in the fundamental structure of our government. That these suggestions are not only fallacious, but in many cases dangerous, goes without question. We have done pretty well during the century and a half of our existence as a nation, under our constitutional system. It is of course not perfect, nothing designed by human hands ever is. But under it we have grown from a scattered chain of thirteen feeble colonies hugging along the Atlantic coast, to a nation which is potentially at least the richest and the most powerful in the world.

All of this did not happen by accident. It was not due entirely to our wealth of natural resources. The inspiration did not come altogether from the invigorating breezes of the new world, but in a major part from the constitutional government under which we have been functioning, a system which, as the President well says, is based on "the ideals of individual initiative and of equality of opportunity." There may be better systems of government for free people than that designed by the founders of the Republic, but it is only fair to say that up to this time they have not been discovered and put into operation. During our generations of constitutional government we have developed in two great political parties leaders skilled in the functioning of representative government, and developed through the inspiration of individual initiative.

Is it reasonable to believe then, that in a time of great trouble like the present, when there is pessimism and depression in every land in the world, that we could gain anything by casting aside the constitutional government under which we have developed so rapidly, and turning to some new scheme with untried leaders, who are actuated not, as they tell us, by a desire to do something for the people, but by purely selfish motives, and the lust for power? For it is an undoubted fact that deeply buried within every one of these revolutionary leaders is the inborn desire to become a dictator. After all the rest of most evil in the world is not the love of money but the love of power, and the man who spends the greater part of his life hoarding money and piling up riches does it not so much for the love of gold as for the desire of the power which the gold gives him.

With the new year approaching, therefore, it might be well to pause for a moment, sum up the blessings which have come to us as individuals and as a people, through the heritage of American constitutional government, and resolve to see that the foundations of this government are not further weakened by the forces from within, no matter how innocent the program of these hurlers may appear on the surface.

THE COLLAPSE OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS

By George R. Lockwood

American entry into the League of Nations was successfully obstructed by American public opinion. In its behalf the most powerful pressure was exerted. The same highly organized and heavily financed forces which have since been persistently seeking to involve the United States in the political and economic system of Europe, enlisted in their behalf many of the educational and religious leaders of the country. American implication in the European system was advocated in the name of peace and justice. But the driving force behind this movement from the beginning has been cold-blooded financial international. Its purposes were stated in the preamble to the covenant: "the removal of trade barriers and the creation of equal economic opportunity among nations." This was and is a project of world leveling. America was to be brought to the general world level in wealth and in standards of wages and living in order that American capital that had been driven abroad through war demands, might be safe-guarded through an increased ability of Europe to pay its debts, even though that solvency were created at the sacrifice of the well-being and the peace of the American people.

Joined with the financial internationalists in this movement were internationalists of another sort. Advocates of European political ideas, of the European doctrine of the master state and the slave subject, of government as the universal employer and dictator; such theories are natural anti-nationalists and believers in the sacrifice of America to so-called world interests.

Foes of the League of Nations in this country declared that while ours is a contract in which peace is the basal order, Europe, because of its multiplied nationalities and its age-old hatreds and rivalries is a continent in which war is an inevitable development. They insisted that the peace of this nation should not be made dependent on the peace of the rest of the world. They declared that the acceptance of Article XVI of the covenant of the League would commit this country to war whenever the European powers should so decide, and that the youth of America could and would, under this contract, if it meant anything at all, be conscripted to fight wars with the origin and purpose of which America had nothing to do.

Full confirmation of this has been given by two crises which have tested the value of the League. First Soviet Russia, after signing the Kellogg treaty renouncing war as an instrument of national policy, invaded China in 1929 and by the use of arms forced that weak republic to its knees in a dispute over a Russian railway, running for hundreds of miles over Chinese soil. Despite an appeal by China the League did nothing. Among all the signatories of the Kellogg treaty, only the United States and Roumania made any protest in behalf of the pact thus insolently trampled upon. In the making of this protest President Hoover received no support whatever from the elements in this country which were proclaiming the Kellogg pact as a cure for war! Encouraged by the precedent, Japan has now proceeded to do what Soviet Russia did, in violation of the Washington agreement, the Kellogg pact which all Americans or credulous pacifists have been telling us outlawed and ended war, and the League covenant.

If the League of Nations covenant were more than a scrap of paper, the League would have been forced under article XVI to blockade Japan, which is an act of war. If this should

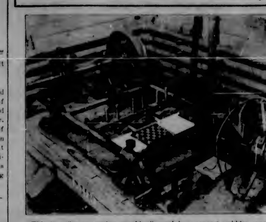
Science Tests Fabrics for Durability



This is a "wear testing machine" used in a recent rubbing marathon to find out how long different kinds of motor car upholsteries and other fabrics would wear. Mohair velvets and velour were consistent winners.

MOHAIR WINNER IN RUBBING MARATHON

In the laboratory of a large west coast manufacturing company, a fat plate slides back and forth, back and forth across a square of upholstery material which has been securely attached to a solid basis. A strange endurance contest is under way, a scientific and accurate test to show how long the sample of fabric will resist the constant wear of the sliding plate. Comes to hand of the number of "rubs" the begins to wear out the machine is stopped and another "piece" is entered in the interesting endurance "marathon."

This, briefly, is one of the tests applied to nobody velvet or cotton cloth as to other materials before the cream of the manufacturers adorn the kind of upholstery they wish to place on the seats they are making. Previous experience has already told those men much about the durability of the materials considered but the chief object of the test is to do in a brief time what would otherwise require months and years so that selections can be made more readily and inferior materials quickly eliminated.

Of all the upholstery fabrics entered for these strange "marathons" mohair velvet or velour has been consistently among the dependable winners. "Horses" are given wear numbers to indicate how well they stood up under the test. Some of the materials are so fragile that they win a score of fifty or less while practically all the mohair samples submitted for test score a count of 6,000 to 8,000.

These wearing tests help explain why automobiles upholstered in mohair frequently bring from $25 to $100 more than similar cars upholstered in other fabrics at the time of resale or trade-in. The upholstery is in good condition after years of service. It is clean and bright, the colors have not faded and the mohair upholstery helps assure the prospective purchaser that the car is good for many more miles of duty.

Mohair is made from the hair of the Angora goat. Mohair velvet or velour is a pile fabric, that is, it is composed of thousands of small fibers so woven that they stand on end, thereby presenting a soft, resilient but durable surface that will withstand years of hard service. In case the pile flattens down after severe and prolonged use, it is quickly and easily refreshened by placing a damp cloth over it and allowing the cloth to dry or by steaming.

For years, velour has been the favorite travel fabric in automobiles and in railroad cars. It is especially suitable to summer use in vehicles and on furniture as well for its fine colors do not fade or rub off as when mohair is permeated by perspiration so that garments are not stained in hot weather. An added reason for its summer popularity is the fact that it is cooler than other materials. The spaces between its many fibers permit a certain amount of air to circulate between the person and the seat, thereby reducing excessive body temperatures.

fail, it would be the duty of the League under its constitution to summon armies and fleets from the member nations and go to war. If the United States were a member of the League, it would be subject to these orders. The young men of America would then, if the League were to observe its commitments, be called to foreign battle fields to fight.

But the League itself now admits the impossibility of executing its own professed purpose, by using the only means which would make its decisions binding. Public opinion in some of the nations belonging to the League would not approve this drastic course. Some of these nations are not at all aroused over Japan's imposition upon China, having indulged in such impositions in past years themselves.

Suppose America had joined the League, as China did, and had placed dependence, as China has, upon the power of the League to defend it from injustice? Suppose, after signing the Kellogg pact we had taken the advice of those who insist that since this pact had abolished war, there was no longer any excuse for the United States having any defensive force? In other words suppose we were as weak and as trustful as China has been, and had thus invited the aggressions which China's weakness and unwarranted trust in the League has invited? What reason is there for believing that we would be any better off today than China is—compelled to choose between a long and bloody war, and the sacrifice of her sovereignty?

What perversity it is that causes so many people to ignore all the facts all the teachings of human history, and all the realities of world conditions, and become willing to risk the safety and welfare of their own country on grandiose theories utterly disconnected with common sense, is a cause for wonder. Even the complete collapse of the League in the first great emergency it has confronted will teach such people nothing. But the lesson will not be lost upon the American people as a whole, and those who think more of the abstract notion of world peace, or of profits from foreign investments, than they do of the peace, the security and the prosperity of their own country and countrymen, will hereafter have less respectful hearing.

Highest Happiness in Labor Well Performed

Today the most welcome word that can come to millions is a promise of employment—to have a share in the world's work. "The song on which many of the older generation were brought up urged one to work in the morning hours, to work 'mid spring-ling flowers, to work even through the sunny noon, saw them on till the "last beam faded, fadeth to shine no more." But it was a hymn song, and the only unhappy note in it was the one that suggested the summing of night, "when man works no more." The most fervent prayer that most men make, especially those who have not much goods laid up against days of ease, comes from ancient times: "May I be taken in the midst of my work."

So far from work being a curse, Carlyle speaks of it as "the grand cure of all the maladies and miseries that ever beset mankind." It is the best physician. So in seeking to find employment for those sort of work, the problem of misery is attacked at its root.

Relief in labor is man's highest vocation, but it is through labor of some sort, whether by hand or brain, whether of one's choice or by compulsion, whether as a vocation or an avocation, that he finds his way to his better and best self.

Giving a man a job is the best form of helpfulness, if he is still able to work.

It has been often said that there is no good obtainable without labor; but it is better said that there is no good that is to be put above the ability and the opportunity to labor. —Kansas City Times.

Just Wouldn't Want Him on Bank's Directorate

There is an air score of the late Senator Caraway, of Arkansas, and a speech he is alleged to have made in the senate, which may not be true but it is fair to repeat it because it might be true, and it is illustrative of some of the ways. The story is that he had been strongly urged to announce for what appeared to be a certain vacancy on the board of a Republican bank, and he replied, says the party committee that called on him:

"I am sorry if anything I have said appears to reflect on the character of any gentleman on the directorate of my distinguished friend on the other side of the aisle, but I have nothing whatever against him. I have no facts whatever to support any charge that I might say I would go on further than to say that he is not one whom I would choose to have serve on the board of directors of my home town bank."—Washington Star.

Hero Well Identified

When the body of John Paul Jones was exhumed common authorities of the United States and France undertook an investigation to identify the body. In the exhumation of the life-size Houdon bust of John Paul Jones and the photograph of the body taken after the exhumation it is seen how the contour of the nose, the arch of the eyebrow, the width between the eyes, the high cheek bones, the muscles of the face, the distance between the hair and the crest of the brow, between the columnal point and the lips and between the lips and the point of the chin, all agree. The peculiar shape of the lobe of the ear in the bust is the exact counterpart of that observed in the body.

Bess Made Cough Mixture

A colony of bees—three hives—owned by a farmer in the neighborhood of Campbeltown, Scotland, last summer made their cells and cell covers of a mixture of tar and wax, the former, which they collected on the main road near at hand, predominating. As might be expected, the honey in the three hives was impregnated with tar, but the bees were not in any way affected by feeding on a mixture of tar and honey. Coal tar contains among other things, naphtalin, the natural food of bees. This is vouched for by Hector Morrison in a letter to Country Life.

Grotesque Triangle Bared in New York

Wife Mothers "Other Woman" and Her Child.

New York—A love triangle with a grotesque twist, worthy of Freud, was revealed as Mrs. May Gledhill, a pretty Canadian, lay fighting for her life in Nassau hospital against an illness which authorities believe may have been caused by poison.

The sick woman is a native of Montreal, where she was recognized as an expert swimmer and was eldress to poke for a Canadian railway advertisement as "the ski girl." She is reported to be distantly related to Mrs. Robert Peel, British prize, whose wife is Beatrice Lillie, the actress.

In the modest Floral Park home from which Miss Gledhill was taken to the hospital, lives Mrs. Lou Conner, forty-six, of whose husband, Wilfred Connor, Edgtown, once a wealthy commuting engineer, is serving a seven-year to seven-year prison for larceny. And with Mrs. Connor is a pretty twenty-six girl boy, whom both she and Mrs. Gledhill call "my baby."

Miss Gledhill's Son.

The boy is the son of Connor and the Canadian girl. When Connor was sent to prison, a little over a year ago, Mrs. Connor took Miss Gledhill, with her baby into her home. Together the two women had been mothering the illegitimate babe and awaiting the return of Connor from prison, until when Miss Gledhill, who had forged deportation to Canada, mysteriously collapsed after a visit from two men who called themselves federal immigration officers. She was taken to Nassau hospital, where she refused to tell whether she had taken poison.

Mrs. Connor, in her home, said she didn't believe "dear May" had taken poison. She said she thought she had been slightly overcome by dread—that she had long feared that she might be sent back to Canada and separated from her child.

The wife revealed that since going to prison Connor has written frequently to both her and Mrs. young Gilbreat letters filled with tender passages.

"He informs me he is still in love with me, but he also tells May that she holds all his affections. We read each other's letters when they arrive," Mrs. Connor said. "I used to think they were both equally responsible in this affair, but after reading some of the letters he has sent to the girl I think he's more than 25 per cent to blame.

"However, I believe that May in a way is responsible for his downfall. He displayed a very prepossessing business and was driven to forgery while investing under the influence for her."

How It Began.

The romance between the young woman and the engineer began in 1925, in front of the Ritz-Carlton hotel in Montreal. Mrs. Connor said. She was able to fix the date because she and her husband had just returned from a reception to the prince of Wales and his brother, Prince George. "We were parked in our car outside the hotel," she continued, "when my husband spied Miss Gledhill. She was weeping bitterly. We accosted her and then drove her home—and that started it all.

"Soon they were confessing an affair under my very eyes," she said. "I said Auntie May; she was young and innocent. It was my husband, his wife, and sometimes they turned her house—I started dinners, proceedings once, but he persuades me to do it. Heck."

Mrs. Connor said she and her son, William, Jr., were living in Greenwich, Conn., when Connor was arrested in Florida for the Vermont authorities. When she arrived at the jail the girl was there, too.

"I went into jail to take care of May and my sister my husband said to me." Mrs. Clinger continued. "I moved to Floral Park and raised this home. I love May as a mother would love a daughter."

Throughout the interview, the little boy remained by Mrs. Connor's side. She referred to him as "my baby."

LENDING TO FRIENDS

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Emeritus Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

"If you want to lose a friend, lend him money," some one has wisely said, and he might very sanely have continued, "if you want to throw a monkey wrench into the amicable relations between relatives, only try the habit of borrowing and lending before startled friends."

One would suppose that there would be a much greater feeling of responsibility when an obligation is assumed with a friend or a relative, but usually quite the opposite feeling exists.

John Mason had never had anything of his own, but he had "married well," as the wife owned a good farm and had comfortable other assets including money in the bank; and John himself was no spendthrift, so there was no problem in what they possessed after the union.

His brother Joe was in a different situation. His wife was without assets as was he himself, and they got on very slowly. They drew a good salary, as it seemed to improve their condition. If they could get hold of a little ready money, said what was quite reasonable then to anyone that since John had it in the bank and had only to sign his name to a small slip of paper in order to get it out, that John was the most sensible to their distress.

Joe approached him, but was not receiving as enthusiastically as he had hoped, but he got a loan with the understanding that it was to be paid back within six months. Things did not go as favorably as Joe had anticipated. He was not able to take up his note at the expiration of the time agreed upon. In fact he was not even been able to take it up at all. The brothers are not friends any more, although John is the one among those causes by Joe's failure to pay his debt. Their wives do not speak when they meet at social gatherings, and neither has a good word to say of the other. There is a permanent rift in the family life.

Calendar for 1769 Is World's Oldest

Vincennes, Ind.—A calendar, three-fourths of an inch wide and about three inches in length, owned by Frank Maynard here, is believed to be both the oldest and smallest calendar in existence.

The calendar, which is printed in German, is for the year 1769. It contains the dates of various saints' days.

Maynard said some of the characters are illegible and that the calendar has never been completely interpreted.

Divorce Laws Vary Widely in States

Difference in Requirements Shown in Survey.

Sarasota, Calif.—There are as many specifications for cutting the marital knot as there are states in the Union.

Lawmakers, it would appear from a survey made by the California legislative bureau, do not see eye to eye when it comes to the question of divorce. The requirements, as a rule, are many and varied.

In Nevada, where the divorce business is considered in the light of a major industry, a marriage may be dissolved for anyone who has lived in the state six weeks. As contrasted to this, South Carolina recognizes no such thing as divorce except by special legislative act in the individual case.

In Tennessee, proceedings may be based on any one of 15 grounds, while New York and the District of Columbia recognize only a charge of infidelity, and in the latter the defendant may never remarry. In Pennsylvania, South Dakota and Tennessee, the defendant may not marry the corespondent until after the death of the plaintiff—an arrangement, incidentally, which puts a premium on the disappearance of the innocent party.

While these points would indicate that the disagreement over divorce details is present, the survey points out that the states do agree on certain matters.

With only a few noticeable exceptions, the states agree that in certain types of divorce cases the parties must have resided in the state for at least one year.

The exceptions range from Nevada, with its six weeks' law, and Idaho asking a three months' stay, to Connecticut, which requires a residence of three years, and Massachusetts which recognizes only those who have lived in the state five years.

The current indication there is a definite consensus concerning causes for divorces as outlined in the statutes. Thirty-seven states have at least seven grounds, and only four, in addition to the District of Columbia, recognize less than five.

Eleven states apparently have an antipathy for the defendant by setting up restrictions concerning the right to remarry which do not apply to the plaintiff.

BRITON SEEMS TO HAVE LOST "GRIP"

No Longer Feels Urge to Settle New Lands.

A hundred years or more ago Englishmen were swarming to every corner of the earth, taking over and populating vast stretches of new land, until it was possible to say that it may still be possible—to say truthfully that there were more English-speaking people outside than within the British Isles.

In the last generation or two there has been a change. Britain still contributes much of the total flow of the earth. But Englishmen are no longer going in such numbers to the Dominions, to the United States, or to Australia, the three great English-speaking countries which were the chief objectives of the old emigration. It may still be possible—to say truthfully that there were more English-speaking people outside than within the British Isles—but it is not possible to say that there were many Englishmen in any other country.

Why has this change come about? Has England grown tired of the old spirit of adventure? Has the spirit of pioneering and colonization died out? Has the old urge to get out and try what a new country has to offer lost its force?

Considerations on both the materialist and on the economic basis do seem to have had their effect on the old pioneering spirit. For with England's economic supremacy has come a certain prosperity. The many profitable openings for investment in foreign countries and the Dominions have tended to make Englishmen who had been persuaded in many to Australia or New Zealand, find that investments sent to responsible firms. They charge that they were induced by

HAILED FATHER OF GAME OF BASEBALL

Abner Doubleday Celebrated as Inventor.

Baseball has a progressive coach-larry all its own, and when a world series is being played we expand this characteristic. All season we have with us cranks and magnus and Kings of baseball, but when Herndon appears with a name as his first in the world's series he becomes, in addition to a big income and a human scalper, many other strange and wonderful things. However, baseball has had one great star who was that in fact, and that was Abner Doubleday, who was born in Cooperstown, N. Y., where Doubleday laid out the first diamond.

As has been said, Doubleday was a real general. He was a West Pointer and saw gallant service in the Mexican war and the campaigns against the Seminole Indians. He fired the first Union gun at Fort Sumter, and at Gettysburg had his horse given command of a corps that stemmed the first day's Confederate rush and then swung his flank movement against which Pickett later charged Cemetery Ridge. Then he is a monument to him near Cemetery Ridge, and another in Arlington cemetery and a third in Cooperstown. The latter proclaims, from its site on the village green, that Abner Doubleday invented baseball in 1839, was played the first game of baseball "supervised by Maj. Gen. Abner Doubleday."

However, as we have said, the glory that the man has, as is usual, went differ as to the date. Some contend he was at Mount Auburn, but the baseball academy at the time he was supposed to be making his old fan invention, the state of New York officially recognized 1839, and so the matter stands. The field is one for old spoken where much can be said. It is fine of the summer and the villagers are able to harry back to their knees and wait on cases and letters between innings. The wise swing and shifting fill in the cranberry fens, but no perfect diamond ever has been built. Apprentices enough. Dr. E. L. Parker, of Albany, N. Y., dug up the records that led to naming Abner Doubleday the inventor of the game story.—New Cottage Times Pleasing.

Old Timer Showed Boys Old Game of Football

Both on the stage and in the field of sport, there are those who long for the good old days and claim that the modern performance is but the shell of the real thing. This has been claimed more than once by old-time football fans and at Yale, for one, it is believed that the old-timers may be right.

It was the old, giant guard, Fudge Heffelfinger, who put doubt in the mind of Old Eli. He returned to the campus at the age of fifty and after watching the Yale varsity for a while turned to Ted Jones, coaching at that time, and complained: "They don't know the line game."

"Well, why don't you go in there and show them the way you used to charge?" Jones suggested with a smile.

"I'll do it," said the fifty-year-old unreformed tiger.

Before, curiously, the Harvard-Yale varsity line the word be used to whom he was a guard, back in the good old days and in a few minutes Ted signed the Yale team at shorts and box T-formation with him to get out of the game before he ruined the team beyond repair.

The old boy went about it, however, assembling that football had become a children's game. If it is a matter of record they he was never asked to attend a Yale line-up.—Exchange.

GIVES NATIONAL ECONOMIC PLAN

By ROME C. STEPHENSON
Former President American Bankers Association

WE hear much of future economic planning to save the nation from a repetition of depression and promise more stable business activity. I know no better plan to suggest to those citizens better fitted by temperament than I am to do this than that every man, woman, every family and every business unit in the country do their share of saving as they are able as a principal of the foundation of their financial policy.

R. C. STEPHENSON

I know of no better aim than this is to build for the nation as a whole a stronger consumer economy—that is through a stronger situation of individual savings, earnings and saving. And I think of no better plan to encourage activity as a beginning than to spend a proper portion of past savings to keep the economic machinery in line. But wisdom there are savings in prosperity that cannot be spending during depression.

Those who contribute that small sum to the vast pool of prosperity carry a security and a protection against pressure which may be greatly multiplied in its effect may. Those who did not use the store will not find themselves in the same position as those who did. Many of the wisest economists of this country today believe that the time is now when it is best for us to save rather than to spend. Some would be less pessimistic and less fanatical than will today.

However, while there should have been more emphasis on savings during prosperity, a measure of the emphasis today might properly be the other way—at least to the extent that those who can afford to do so may increase their spending instead of overtaxing their savings. While wages have been fairly sustained full, there are millions who have not suffered so seriously in respect to the real purchasing power of their incomes. If we believe in the long run, as most of the day, one might see the impression that everybody was out of a job and nobody's business was earning anything. Many of our people were able to continue a normal program of prudent buying and curtailing their expenditures to a minimum.

A Business Stimulus

The sum total of this unreasonable attainment of spending is an economic influence contributing to the stagnation of trade. To the opposite extent I believe free spending, to a normal spending on the part of those who are able to do so would be an important tonic toward the situation of trade. I do not mind by this that we should have indiscriminate spending merely for the sake of spending, but the very motive away of our economic life is the interchange of goods, and unless we have that we cannot have prosperity.

I strongly believe that we are at that point in the depressive stage of the business cycle that any sound stimulating influence will start a real movement in the direction of a return toward prosperity. So much of the weakening of the whole sense of activity has been liquidated, so many malaise incidents corrected and such large volumes of inventory goods have been used up or worn out that the pressure of unavoidable purchases must soon or later be felt. When that time definitely comes we may wonder if the first impetus of a new era of normal business.

When Government Aids Agriculture

Demand for relief, agricultural or otherwise, comes naturally from those who feel most the pinch of hard times in simple pressure. Those most affected by appeals to government for aid, but are frequently agencies set in operation by governmental agency purposes itself of reaching the people in the way of supply and demand have never been permanently and successfully successful. So in general governmental intervention that artificially stimulates prices or even stabilizes them when the prevailing economic situation obviously shows that such conditions are inevitable are expedients that yield only temporary relief rather than permanent cure. Various plasters may relieve pain for the moment but they rarely cut at the root of the real trouble.—H. L. Russell

When army worms threatened 15 crops of Marshall County, Tennessee, information concerning the pests was made available by the College of Agriculture, and banking interests took steps to organize a war against the common enemy, calling mass meetings. Mr. Bank commissioners and chamber of facts and helpful recommendations for eradicating pests got before the greatest number of people possible. This illustrates what can be done in the case of many kinds of crops.

Napoleon No Scholar

Napoleon did not distinguish himself in school. As one writer puts it: "Napoleon's scholastic career was not brilliant and he received his commission in the artillery in 1785 without having given evidence of any marked ability, except, perhaps that of holding his own counsel and of carrying through to the end any attitude adopted. Those traits, which afterward made him feared equally in the council chamber and on the battlefield, he inherited from his mother.

ENGINEERS SEEK GREATER COMFORT IN AUTOMOBILES

Value of Mohair Velvet for Easier Auto Rides Stressed by Experts.

Greater comfort in automobiles is now the chief objective of engineers according to John A. C. Warner, general manager of the Society of Automotive Engineers which held its annual meeting at White Sulphur Springs, Va., recently.

Pointing out that practically all the major items developed in a recent thirty high point of mechanical efficiency and may be depended upon to last you there and bring you back," Mr. Warner declared that the public is now demanding bigger and roomier automobiles rather thicker and more comfortable cushions, finer springs and richer upholstery.

Paul W. Chapman, secretary of the Mohair Institute, told how they have proven that pile fabric upholstering, the wool nap material giving the new designs and driver's clothing, helping to keep the rider in a more comfortable and safer position, also free the fabric because of its especial unusual resiliency, from electric noise, lessening the nervous strain on the drivers.

The fact that mohair velvets do not stone the clothing was an added point in interest considered in the study governing cushioning.

The problem of ridding motors of fatigue has been reduced to simple terms by the invention of a "vibrograph" by Dr. D. C. Miller of George Washington University. While this instrument is able to prove to most people are after automobile rides.

The comfort stands on the "solid matter" which is simply a platform adjusted on sensitive springs. If the vibrograph is in any direction, because of the motion-illness of the person, compare record the movements so that by electing the number of times the plat form tips, the speed, degree of fatigue is measured. For when a person is tired, he cannot stand as steadily as the platform.

MUST U. S. TAXPAYERS PAY FOR EUROPE'S WAR?

Every American citizen is entitled to his own opinion on the subject of suspending, reducing or canceling the debts owed the United States government by European countries, but it is equally the privilege of every American citizen to know what it is all about before forming a hasty conclusion on the subject. One thing is now pretty generally understood that was not apparent at the time the suspension of payments were first suggested last summer and lauded as a means of ending the depression. The belated discovery is that international bankers loaned large sums of money to foreign countries following the World War, and that payments of principal and interest are delayed, and under present conditions endanger us. Now if the American government excuses payments, reduces the debts, or cancels them entirely, it will be easier and surer for the international bankers to make their collections. Hence when cancellation is advised it is well to remember that the financiers are proposing no cancellation of the debts due them. They want theirs in full. The cancellation covers only the debts due our government.

It is well to remember, too, that there can be no such thing as cancellation of these debts. They are obligations of the people of foreign countries contracted by their governments. They are due our government, and if they are not paid by the foreign debtors they must be paid with interest by the taxpayers of America.

We yet owe $17,000,000,000 of our expense of the war. We are paying for it every hour of our lives. We have already reduced the amounts we loaned the other countries during the war. When we have paid what we yet owe and then tax ourselves again to pay our government to enable it to cancel the foreign debts, we will come pretty near paying for the World War.—Rural New Yorker.

Excellency of Christ

"He is a path, if any be misled;
He is a robe, if any naked be;
If any chance to hunger, He is bread;
If any be bondmen, He is free;
If any be but weak, how strong is He!
To dead men life He is, to sick men health;
To blind men sight, and to the needy wealth!
A pleasure without loss, a treasure without stealth."

A HAPPY NEW YEAR TO ALL.

The success of the Church School program, given Christmas eve should be appreciated. The program consisted of a miscellaneous group at the beginning by the Primary department under Mrs. Hilles and her helpers. The latter part was a Christmas Pantomime of the quite familiar story, "Why the Chimes Rang." This part was under the direction of Mrs. Faith Ely supported by a large young People's Chorus, and several other church school members. The thing that appealed to many of those present was the fact that it was different than the usual programs of this season of the year. Because of the happiness that seems to surround the Christmas time we regretfully witness its departure.

The Annual Meeting of the Iron Ore Congregational Church will be held Friday, January 1st, 1932. The event will be preceded by a church and community New Years dinner at 1:00 P. S. T. The dinner is cooperative.

Sunday Morning we will celebrate the Lord's supper Several names will be suggested for membership at Charlevoix.

We have rounded out just one year of service as pastor of the Charlevoix and Ironton churches. The last twelve months have been pleasant.

The college students have begun to return to their school work. We congratulate them and at the same time we will miss them.

The January meeting of the Little Traverse Bay Ministerial Association will be held in Boyne City next Monday, January 4th.

The Pastor, will address the Boyne City High School, Tuesday, January 5th.

"Christian Science" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all the Christian Science Churches on Sunday, December 27.

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me" (John 14:1).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "Science is an emanation of divine Mind, and is alone able to interpret that aright. It has a spiritual and not a material origin. It is a divine utterance,—the Comforter which leadeth into all truth" (p. 127).

LEGION PLANS CO. BULLETIN

"FORWARD MARCH" TO MAKE APPEARANCE SOON

Merchants Giving Splendid Support In Efforts To Secure State Convention in 1933

The first issue of "Forward March" the official publication of the American Legion's Charlevoix County Tri-Post Association, is due to appear within a short time. A very gratifying number of advertisements have been secured from the merchants in Charlevoix, Boyne City and East Jordan and it is expected that a considerable number of business and professional men will want to be represented in the live little monthly which will periodically be placed in the hands of approximately four hundred Legionnaires and ex-service men in this county.

Publication of the paper promises that will be treated in these first issues of "Forward March" is that featuring of the 1933 State Legion Convention for Charlevoix. The 1932 convention at Kalamazoo will end, and at that time the delegates will decide upon the place of the 1933 gathering. The fate will be, in all probability the first Saturday, Sunday and Monday in September. At the Mid-Winter Conference of Post Officers, held at Bay City on December 5th and 6th last, an invitation was extended by Commander Lee F. Allard of the local post to the officers delegates present to hold the 1933 convention at Charlevoix and 500 copies of the Illustrated Charlevoix booklet were distributed among them by the Charlevoix delegates. The proposal, which had previously received the promise of support from the delegates to the Lower 13th District meeting of the Legion at Rogers City on September 6th, met with a very favorable attitude on the part of the post officers from some 300 Legion posts assembled at the Bay City meeting, but it is necessary that the local post make a good showing at the Kalamazoo convention in 1932. It is desired to have the post bugle and drum corps properly uniformed by that time and so drilled and practised that they will be the equal to any community they represent. Plans looking to these ends will be discussed at the

PETOSKEY HUNTERS BAG COYOTES AND BOBCAT

Two full grown coyotes and a bobcat taken by hunters were on exhibition at one of the hardware stores in Petoskey. All were large, full grown beasts. One of the coyotes was taken by L. A. Platte, the other by Ira Longcore from a swamp near Epsilon. The bobcat was taken from a swamp near Charlton by Fred Hosta. This, according to reports, is the first animal of the name and nature taken in that vicinity in recent weeks.

10 PERCENT SALARY CUT IS PROPOSED

BY DIRECTOR CONSERVATION DEPT. THIS MONTH

A ten percent reduction in salaries and conservation department employees will be the recommendation of George R. Hogarth, director, to the Conservation Commission in January.

"After a careful review of the Department's financial affairs at the close of the calendar year, and in keeping with the expressed wish of the governor, made earlier in the year, that all state departments practice the most rigid economy, it is now evident that economies more drastic than those suggested to the Commission in December will be necessary," Director Hogarth explained.

"Additional curtailment in services was then recommended. It now appears that the reduction of the sum of $100,000 was conservative. In view of the fact that departmental activities were reduced to a minimum earlier in the year, it would seem that further radical changes in this direction would be injurious to conservation affairs in the state. One other alternative is open, and it appears to be a kind reasoning and good business judgment and is in keeping with the policies adopted by private industry throughout the country; I shall recommend to the Conservation Commission at its next meeting a salary reduction of 10 percent affecting all employees of the Department.

"Should this recommendation be approved by the Commission, all citizens of the county generally are all interested and ready to give them a royal welcome.

Business and professional men of Charlevoix County, who have not as yet been approached with the matter of advertising their services in the columns of "Forward March" but would like to participate in the same are requested to communicate with Shirley B. Henry, care of Charlevoix Sentinel, Charlevoix, Mich. Mr. Henry is chairman of the County Tri-Post Publication Committee and in charge of the actual production of the publication.

At a meeting of Leslie T. Shapton post, held Tuesday evening, it was decided to hold a treasure hunt in the near future, the date for which will be announced later. A very gratifying number of advertisements have been secured from the merchants in Charlevoix, Boyne City and East Jordan and it is expected that a considerable number of business and professional men will want to be represented in the live little monthly which will periodically be placed in the hands of approximately four hundred Legionnaires and ex-service men in this county.

THE SENTINEL FOR PRINTING

TWO FINE ARTISTS REPEAT BIDS FOR STELLER HONORS

Paramount presents an exceptional vehicle for intense dramatic action in "Ladies of the Big House" which will be the feature at the Palace theatre Saturday and Sunday.

This picture lost for its leading featured artists two talented personages who recently sprang into public favor because each possesses high dramatic ability, a distinct personality, and fixed looks, qualities essential to success.

Sylvia Sidney, who plays the leading woman's part, already has a strong fan following, because of her outstanding work in "City Streets" with Gary Cooper, in "An American Tragedy" with Phillip Holmes, in "Street Scene" with William Collier and in her Broadway stage success "Bad Girl."

She has at her leading man, Gene Raymond, who sprang into prominence in the Broadway stage production, "Young Sinners" which secured him a screen contract. Recently he was featured in "Personal Maid" as Nancy Carroll's leading man.

Raymond's light blond complexion is a pleasing contrast to Miss Sidney's dark tresses in the "Ladies of the Big House," which is a gripping romance. The love drama of the lives of two young people who on the eve of their wedding day are cruelly separated by the law.

The picture has the strong punch of authenticity in its prison scenes. It is a dramatic perspective by the convict-author, Ernest Booth, with screen adaptation and dialogue by Louis Weitzenkorn.

CHARLIE GRAVES DIES ON STREET

DROPS DEAD IN FRONT OF K. P. HALL MONDAY MORNING

Was In Apparent Good Health When He Left His Home; Community Suffers Real Loss

When Charlie Graves left his home on Petoskey Avenue, early Monday forenoon to drive down to the business center of Charlevoix he was apparently in his usual good health. Less than two minutes later as he stepped from his car on Bridge St. in front of the K. of P. Hall, he suddenly lunged to the side walk and was dead before parties standing within a few feet of the machine parked at the curb arrived at the spot where death overtook its victim.

Mr. Graves was well and favorably known in this Charlevoix city in Northern Michigan as well, where, as a resident of Charlevoix he has lived for the past fifty-one years during which period he has been engaged in business, that of home decorator and also as contractor for timber. In this he was an efficient and artistic workman.

He was a man of heroic physical proportions. A lover of the great outof-doors, a student of nature, enjoyed roaming through the deep woods in quest of game and passionately fond of stream, lake and water sports. Possibly his knowledge of the many lakes and streams in this region was superior to that of any person His familiarity with this region was well known by a large majority of summer visitors. In these he had an extensive personal acquaintance and many pronounced friends with whom he made frequent trips, either to nearby or more distant points, during the vacation time.

He was born at Albion, Michigan, March 15, 1859, therefore nearly seventy-three years of age at the time of his death.

April 18, 1880 he was united in marriage to Rosa Emma Rockford by whome he is survived, also by a son, Ray Graves of Charlevoix, two sisters Mrs. Nettie Peabody of Albion and Mrs Grace J. Graves of Grand Rapids, also by three brothers, Harry K. Graves of Charlevoix, Lou Graves of Grand Rapids, and William Graves whose present address is unknown.

Funeral service was held from the family residence, 204 Petoskey Avenue, Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock with Rev. G. Russell Parker, pastor of the First Congregational Church officiating.

The death of Mr. Graves calls to the mind of local citizens another tragic death in the family, that of his son Will, who was stricken January 16, 1930, while walking along the shore line of Lake Michigan and like his parent died instantly.

NUMBER OF PROPOSED CONSTITUTIONAL CHANGES ON BALLOT THIS FALL

The compiling division of the Department of State, is making preparations for the handling of a far greater number of proposed constitutional amendments and referendums in 1932 than is usually found on the ballot in a presidential election.

By the filing of the requisite number of signatures, the circulating matter toll passed by the 1931 legislature has been held in abeyance until the voters have an opportunity of expressing themselves next November.

Two petitions containing 5,000 and 15,000 signatures have already been filed with the department calling for changes in the state's prohibition laws, and it is understood that additional petitions will be filed within the near future. Voters will probably be given the opportunity to pass on various constitutional amendments regarding taxation at the next election.

To place a proposed constitutional amendment on the ballot in November, 1932, 85,089 signatures are needed. To initiate legislation at the next session of the legislature, the names of 58,071 voters must be signed to petitions while a referendum on an existing law requires 42,545 names.

James Bellinger returned to the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, early this week, after spending the holiday season with Charlevoix relatives and friends.

MRS. P. E. MILLER DIES JANUARY 2ND

The American Legion, of which Mr. Miller was a member, and the American Legion Auxiliary attended the service in a body. The Legion furnished the bearers.

Mrs. Permelia Dutton Miller was born at Lorain, Ohio, August 3, 1903 and continued to live until her marriage.

She was united in marriage to Harold Miller June 30, 1924. To this union two children were born, Susan Elizabeth and Sarah Louise. The family came to Charlevoix within the last year to make it their permanent home.

IMPRESSED LABOR IN FIGHTING FIRES

PLENTY HELP AVAIABLE DURING LAST TWO YEARS

A man working eight hours a day, seven days a week for 272 years would represent the services of impressed labor on forest fires in Michigan during the 1931 fire season, the Division of Field Administration of the Department of Conservation said today in discussing the impressed labor system in forest fire control.

During the past season the Department spent $242,000 for impressed labor. All of this money was spent at the rate of thirty cents an hour, the legal rate, the division said. The total amount $125,000 was spent from the Game Protection Fund made available from the sale of hunting, fishing and trapping licenses, and $117,000 from the general fund of the state.

Impressed labor used in forest fire suppression includes only those men hired by field officers and does not include the regular fire wardens and about 800 "key men" who are experienced fire fighters paid only during the time they actually fight fires. Keymen receive 40c an hour and are highly valuable in directing small crews of inexperienced men.

Grandi Fought in Trenches; Now He Is Seeking Peace

Rome.—Dino Grandi, Italian foreign minister who recently conferred with President Hoover in Washington on disarmament, is another "magic wand-ier." Since he entered the Italian infantry in 1915, when too overage, he always has fought first, on the field of battle second as a military theorist, and third as a diplomatist of disarmament. He is to Italy what Mr. Hoover is to the United States.

He is hunted with military respect. If he should join a soviet, it would be that of a president of the Italian soviet and on his banner would appear the lictorial fasces, which Italy borrows for military use. It survived the shock under the military order on the field of battle and is at whole when the Italian people, the entire people would ask to lay down arms and sit down to parley.

Now, for an ensemble of peace, who has been through all the dangers and sufferings of war, he has fought against them. He combined as a private and officer in the Italian fight against Bolshevism. His valor and leadership made him a colonel at twenty-four.

Taking matters of peace very seriously, he studied economics at Bologna university. There he met Mussolini, then a young socialist leader, who carried on the Bolshevist fight against the Nationalists. Grandi was elected to the Chamber of Deputies during the stormy years of Mussolini's rise to power.

There he met Mussolini, then a young socialist leader, who carried on the Bolshevist fight against the Nationalists. Grandi was elected to the Chamber of Deputies during the stormy years of Mussolini's rise to power.

His valor and leadership made him a colonel at twenty-four. This was during the last World War, when he was only twenty-two he was in command to save his unit from annihilation by a British tank attack.

Returning from the war at twenty-three he had to go back to his books because he was not twenty-five. This, however, was the last time that the Fascisti have been allowed to go to school so that he was among the first 28 deputies, who joined the Fascisti banners with Mussolini on their chest.

He then found himself without a newspaper, by plunging and turned newspaper into the organ of the Fascisti party. He became a busy writer and his paragraphs became dynamite shells which exploded in the ranks of the Fascisti party. He was the first of the regime in the Senate at Bologna.

In the times, from 1921 to the "March on Rome," in 1922, he carried on a relentless fight against the old political parties. His battle brought him an ambassador for the new dictatorship, which succeeded to such a degree and further in his career of Bologna. He was the last of the Fascisti squad and the moving spirit of the vast regime. At the convention of the Fascisti party in Rome in 1929 he was authorized making" pronouncement for the Fascisti party.

He was in the forefront of the Fascisti movement in 1922 and when Mussolini formed the famous challenge to take the government of Italy before the 1922 anniversary of the Fascisti party, Grandi was one of four men in the Mussolini cabinet.

The emergence was to take concrete form in the "March on Rome" and for this great event, Grandi was the chief of staff. As the quadrumvirate of leaders met in Perugia to put in effect their plan, Grandi was there as chief architect. The success with which the campaign was executed naturally designated himself to be one of the first five forces in the new movement.

For his exquisite service in aiding the success of the Fascisti revolution, he was nominated a statesman general in Fascisti militia at the crucible in 1923. He kept his rank in the regular army and in 1927 was promoted to the rank of major in the line. For special merit, he received another promotion and now holds the rank of lieutenant colonel in the reserve of the regular army.

He was one four secretary of the Fascisti parliamentary group and was elected a vice presidents of the chamber of deputies in 1924.

Grandi was born in Mezzolara, a small town near Bologna on June 4, 1895.

Largest Vessel Ever Built in America

This photograph of a painting shows what the Manhattan, largest merchant vessel ever built in the United States, will look like when it is completed. It was launched the other day at Camden, N. J., and will enter the transatlantic service of the United States lines next June. The Manhattan is of 24,000 gross registered tons, will carry about 1,000 passengers and will have a cruising speed of more than twenty knots. Capt. George Fried, hero of several ocean rescues, will be her commander.

Army Air Pilots Make Trip at 20,000 Feet

Chicago.—Twelve pursuit planes of the Ninety-fourth squadron recently completed a cross country flight from Selfridge field, Mich., to Washington, D. C., at an altitude of 20,000 feet.

All the pilots used liquid oxygen.

This flight was of exceptional importance not only from a military point of view, but also because of its significance to commercial operations. It was the first colossal and sustained flight of aircraft through the upper regions of the atmosphere or the lower regions of the stratosphere, where there is little oxygen.

The army air corps has been conducting experiments to high altitude operations, having in a conditioning period. Planes flying at 21,000 feet are subjected to the effects of lack of oxygen, which above the cloud bank, but the most sensitive instruments can detect their passing.

The flight demonstrated one additional fact, that if Washington should be endangered by an attack, a squadron could take off from Selfridge field, arrive at Washington since the airplanes attacking cause and have sufficient time left to go right into combat at the ceiling of the normal flight range above the zone defended by pursuit.

The commercial significance of the flight lies in the fact that members of the air corps industrial reserve are now possessors of transport ships at altitudes of 20,000 feet or higher in the same fashion as transcontinental mail pilots cruise, buried half smothered with oxygen from tanks. At the altitude weather conditions are always good and higher speeds can be attained than near the earth with the same planes and motors.

Sees Small Profit in Cattle Feeding

If prewar prices prevail for beef next spring, there is a chance for very little profit from cattle feeding, except where the better grades of cattle are fed, according to H. C. Hurdick, associate economist at the Colorado Agricultural college.

The feeding of two-year-old steers was studied on a total of about 30 farms. Steers weighing an average of 826 pounds when purchased cost an average of 7.25 pounds of gain in 108 days. At present prices of the feeds actually used, the feed this winter would cost $17.28 per head or $6.50 per 100 pounds of gain.

"If these same steers could be put in the feedlot this fall at $5 per hundredweight," says Hurdick, "charges for interest, death loss and miscellaneous costs from now until next winter, taxes, yardage and equipment, horse labor and overhead would total $7.55 per head or $2.85 per hundredweight of gain. With feed costing $6.50, the total cost of gain per hundredweight of gain would approximate $9.75.

"Changes in feeding practice will affect this cost," he adds. "For example, one man, using alfalfa hay and well bred yearlings and pasture and roots in 1929 gained 2.5 pounds per head per day and fed 8 per hundredweight of gain. Others had feed costs close to this, while some had higher costs.

"Assuming average gains, an 822 pound feeder steer would sell at 12.25 pounds at the end of 108 days. The costs listed above would require a selling price of $9.28 f. o. b. the feedlot, or a margin of $1.03 to cover feed costs. Extra charges in marketing would require a higher price at the market.

"Every spring market prices in favor for the years 1901 to 1915 inclusive but for the month of March there was an average price of $5.10 per hundredweight for all classes of beef, and $5.90 as an average for April. No reasons are available for the unfavorable trades of the cattle. Higher prices for this period were apparently due to the fact that supplies were cut by the reported lowered prices.

"However, it emphasizes this feeding often a chance for very those prices change since the lowest point of cattle are fed, since those getting better prices. Indications are that the number of cattle on feed will be lower than last year, and the quality will be better on an average. Hence it appears that certain days at Pittsburgh and Chicago and the Kansas City of the Cape of Good Hope province, were searched for flora by the medicine men.

Not a solitary farmer could be found in the entire area who does not regret and mourn the late-owned tractor, was absolutely devoid of interest. Even one, from the most prosperous and thoroughly mechanized farms, was absolutely devoid of illness.

The thirsty of some residents is that the climates in the barren lands of the Cape of Good Hope antiseptic act as a natural disinfectant.

Modern Girl Benighted

Nothing is more astonishing to us older physicians of London than the complete disappearance in one generation of disease which I, as a medical student, saw extensively in hospital practice, namely, chlorosis of young girls. This was a serious form of anemia, which choked our hospital wards and clinics with its frequency. Its disappearance was practically identical with the disappearance of the corset and the greater freedom of bodily movements, and the increased enjoyment of outdoor exercise by girls and young women, and it is a singular instance of how fashion may hinder or foster health. The new, slender standard of beauty in London in the autumn and at week-ends is a comparatively modern invention and one contributing to better health and physique.—Sir Ernest Graham Little.

Player Gives New Note to Usual Golf Alibi

There were two things in George Tweep's life that meant everything to him—his family and his golf. It is really difficult to understand how he managed to find time for both. At any rate, his wife and five children complained of no neglect and his golf score averaged around 78.

George had won the right to represent his club in the state golf tournament. During the period preceding the final matches, Mrs. Tweep presented him with a sixth child.

Another man would either have withdrawn from all sports, or would have deserted his family at such a time. George, however, was prepared for the situation. A bassinet had been built on the front lawn of his home. Then he could practice and be near the proud Tweep at the same time.

One afternoon an appreciative gallery came over to watch George do his putting. From all angles, he tapped the ball into the cup—his form was little short of masterful. At length he decided to try one more and roll it a dot. It was a simple six-footer, the kind he had been making all afternoon.

He took his stance, held his breath, drew back his putter slowly and brought it forward assuredly. At the moment of impact from within the house came the plaintive wail of the Tweep infant. George's wrist turned, his options loosened the cup by a good three inches.

Facing a smile, George looked at the gallery and remarked grimly:

"The bird!" he said. "I guess it's that new heir!"—Kansas City Star.

African Province Found to Be Flyless Oasis

A plague resembling scurvy of Africa resulted in the discovery of a province which is entirely free of flies and the incident was regarded as so remarkable that the investigators carried on their researches in this unusual situation. This favored spot was the territory of Florida and the county prominently known as Florida is in the province of Transvaal. Reports of the ravages of the disease and the search for the cause were received from various parts of the country and the investigators were confronted by the problem of how to explain the fact that the disease was confined to certain districts. Finally the theory was advanced that the disease was carried by flies and that the districts free from flies were free from the disease. Florida was found to be free from flies and the theory was proved correct.

Pigs Made Appreciable Gains on Cooked Beans

The Michigan agricultural experiment station has found that the cooking of soy beans improves their feeding value for pigs. The Ohio station found that cooking soaked soy beans at 212.7 pounds for 30 minutes per bushel. In a ration including raw soy beans pigs fed 20 weeks attained 200 pounds weight as compared with an average of 247 pounds for those that fed a ration including cooked soy beans but limited to the same amount of feed as was fed the pigs getting raw soy beans. Where pigs were allowed full access to the feed, the cooked pigs ate 6 pounds more feed per pound of gain, and showed a gain of 8 days earlier than similar pigs fed raw soy beans. In these trials on ground alfalfa, the efficiency was fed in addition to soy beans. The many soy beans produced on the Ohio station tells us that a ration for fattening hogs should not contain over 10 per cent of soy beans.—Hoard's Dairyman.

Cholera Prevalent

Ohio is experiencing now an outbreak of hog cholera almost as serious as that in 1925, according to reports of state and federal veterinarians. Due to low prices in recent years many farmers have allowed their sows and herds to remain unprotected, without immunization against cholera. The small community auction sales where no supervision is found have been a source of spreading disease with its frequency. Its disappearance was practically identical with the disappearance of the corset and the greater freedom of bodily movements, and the increased enjoyment of outdoor exercise by girls and young women, and it is a singular instance of how fashion may hinder or foster health. The new, slender standard of beauty in London in the autumn and at week-ends is a comparatively modern invention and one contributing to better health and physique.—Sir Ernest Graham Little.

Few Young Horses

There is a shortage of good young horses and mules in the United States, according to the Horse Association of America. In 1920 there were 6,500,000 horses under four years old in 1930 there were less than 2,000,000 of that age—a shortage of more than 4,000,000. It is estimated by the Horse association that the United States will lose more than 500,000 horses in 1931, while raising only a little more than 500,000.—Nebraska Farmer.

Prevent Calf Vices

Where two or more calves are living fed skimmilk and are not tied up in stanchions during the feeding period they often develop the habit of sucking each other's ears or heifers. Veterinarians say heifers that suck usually result in congested quarters and permanent injury. Not only should the calves be confined in stanchions while having their milk but also until their ears are dry or until they have had an opportunity to eat some ground feed.—American Agriculturist.

Paid to Top Dress

Top dressing irrigated pasture with 12 tons of manure an acre increased returns $12.60 an acre at the Huntley experiment station, Yellowstone county, Montana. The unfertilized pasture was worth $27.36 an acre the first of the six years the experiment was carried on. The fertilized pasture was worth $39.64 an acre. The sixth year of the experiment the pasture that had been top dressed was worth $49.25 an acre and the one that had received no treatment $36.37 an acre.

French Records Show Drop in Air Crashes

Paris.—Security in aviation has advanced to such an extent that there was but one accident for every 540,000 miles flown by French pilots in 1930. That encouraging information was contained in a survey published by the ministry of air, which reported 56 per cent less accidents in 1930 than in 1929.

Improved motors, better construction, the invention of safety appliances and better pilots are credited with the reduction of fatal accidents. The ministry believes that accidents can be practically eliminated within a few years, when more mechanical appliances are perfected to enable unskilled pilots and guide planes.

Commercial aircraft and lines: One accident for 240,000 miles flown in 1927; for 190,000 miles in 1928; for 320,000 miles in 1929; and 540,000 miles in 1930.

Training centers (civil and military): One accident for 1,000 hours of flight in 1927; for 2,000 hours in 1928; for 3,000 hours in 1929; and for 3,553 miles in 1930.

Military aviation: One accident for 2,000 hours of flight in 1927; for 2,500 hours in 1928; for 3,000 hours in 1929; and for 3,333 miles in 1930.

POTPOURRI

Platinum

Platinum, the most valuable of all precious metals, is named from the Spanish word "plata," meaning silver. The ore bearing this mineral was discovered in Peru about the middle of the Eighteenth century and in one site found it gets of gold here the needs. Less than a half ounce of that source a year are produced. 85 per cent coming from Russia. In 1931 Nobel Prize winner Irving Langmuir, of the General Electric company, will be glad and feel a sense of relief when they read your obituary or some in the evening newspaper? It would give me pleasure, to think so.

There are men in every community who really exist, who when anyone is in trouble are first thought of in any enterprise is to be undertaken are called on immediately. If weighty problems are to be considered are consulted as valuable advisers.

Upon whose shoulders the burden of duties this office tends to the limit of practice, they seem ready for more of days earlier than another pigs fed raw soy beans. In these trials on ground alfalfa, the efficiency was fed in addition to soy beans. The many soy beans produced on the Ohio station tells us that a ration for fattening hogs should not contain over 10 per cent of soy beans.—Hoard's Dairyman.

Such a man is Morton Hood, known to me as we were walking along. "In that no one is really going to miss Field. He never seemed to enjoy."

It was the last sentence which struck me most forcibly. Will the hours of self-less relief when I am gone? Will there be those whose handshakings have been life-forced with or thwarted who will be glad and feel a sense of relief when they read your obituary or some in the evening newspaper? It would give me pleasure, to think so.

Grandi Fought in Trenches; Now He Is Seeking Peace

Rome—Dino Grandi, Italian foreign minister who recently conferred with President Hoover in Washington on disarmament, is another "happy warrior." Since he enlisted in the Italian infantry in 1915, when but nineteen he always has fought first, on the field of battle, second as a militant Fascist, and third as a propagandist of international peace.

He is loaded with military medals. If he should don a uniform it would be that of a general of the Fascist militia and on his breast would appear the diamond decorations which Duce bestows for military valor. He received the silver medal for infantry valor on the field of battle and is entitled to wear the bronze medal and ribbon which would add to his military accolades.

Near to a champion of peace who has come through all the danger and suffering of war, he is close to the president. He entered as a private and within a year was made a lieutenant. His valor and leadership made him a captain at twenty-two. He achieved distinction at Mount Asiago, Val Lagarina, the Altiplani Val Bronta and on the battle of the Piave, the decisive battle in the Italian campaign.

Returning from the war at twenty-three, he had to go back to his books for he had chosen the law as a career. It was while a student that he was attracted to the Fascist movement. One night while studying, he was interrupted by some of Asiticlists who were demonstrating outside his window and decrying the service of all those who participated in the war. Grandi refused to study for the demonstration insisted on going and as accustomed him this he declined to fight his fellow students, Mussolini and I were as close in like as anyone had been, and yet it was a surprise to each of us when we were chosen as two of the parliamentarians. We had thought he had more intimate friends than ourselves.

We were both a little sad about Fiedl, not especially because he had gone, but because his going would make so little difference to anybody. He had seldom been counted in, for opinions if he had any, carried very little weight, the influence was seldom wielded when weighty matters were under consideration.

"The saddest thing about it all," Mussolini said to me as we were walking along, "is that no one is really going to miss Fiedl. He never seemed to count."

It was the last sentence which struck me most forcibly. Will the forces of evil feel relief when I am gone? Will there be those whose contributions have been interfered with or thwarted who will be glad and feel a sense of relief when they read your obituary or mine in the evening newspaper? It would give me pleasure to think so.

There are men in every community who really count, who when anyone is in trouble are first thought of, if any enterprise is to be undertaken are called on immediately, if weighty problems are to be considered are considered as valuable advisers.

Farmer was one of those. He was not a member of the board of directors of the First National bank, but this institution never turned any serious financial enterprise without securing Farmer's opinion of it. He had little autocracy apparently, but he had what was more worth while—that is influence. He wasn't as much of a church man but he had a good deal to say if a new reformer were under consideration in one of the local churches. He seemed to have a say, too, in politics, in business, and in the affairs of the community in general.

I should like to be such a man.

this great event, Grandi was the chief of staff. As the quadrumvirate of leaders met in Perugia to put in effect their plan, Grandi was there as chief adviser. The success with which the campaign was crowned naturally designated Grandi to be one of the directing forces in the new movement.

For his valuable service in aiding the success of the Fascist revolution he was negotiated a consular general to Canton, Chinese at its creation in 1923. He held his rank in the region for two years and in 1927 was promoted to the rank of under to the king. For special merit, he received another promotion and now holds the rank of lieutenant colonel in the reserve of the regular army.

Grandi was born at Bastia, a small town near Bologna, on June 4, 1895.

ODD THINGS AND NEW—By Lame Bode

French Records Show Drop in Air Crashes

Paris—Security in aviation has advanced to such an extent that there was but one accident for every 580,588 miles flown in France during 1930. That encouraging indication was established in a report published by the ministry of air, which reported 50 per cent less accidents in 1930 than in 1929.

Improved motors, better construction, the invention of safety appliances and better pilots are credited with the reduction of fatal accidents. The ministry believes that accidents can be practically eliminated within a few years, when more mechanical appliances are perfected to stabilize machines still further and cut the chances. The rapid progression of security is shown in the ministry's report:

Commercial and air mail lines: One accident for 216,000 miles flown in 1922; for 1,000,000 miles in 1928; for 3,233,000 miles in 1929, and 580,588 miles in 1930.

Training centers (civil and military): One accident for 1,400 hours of flight in 1928; for 2,648 hours in 1929, and for 2,582 hours in 1930.

Military aviation: One accident for 2,033 hours of flight in 1928; for 3,460 hours in 1929; for deaths in 1929, 30 in 1930.

Naval aviation: One accident for 1,582 hours of flight in 1929; for 3,748 hours in 1930.

Largest Vessel Ever Built in America

This photograph of a painting shows what the Manhattan, largest merchant vessel ever built in the United States, will look like when it is completed. It was launched the other day at Camden, N. J., and will enter the transatlantic service of The United States lines next June. The Manhattan is of 30,000 gross registered tons, will carry about 1,000 passengers and will have a cruising speed of more than twenty knots. Capt. George Ertel, navy of several ocean reserves, will be her commander.

Army Air Pilots Make Trip at 20,000 Feet

Chicago—Twelve pursuit planes of the Ninety-fourth aqundron recently completed a cross country flight from Selfridge field, Mindigan, to Washington, D. C., at an altitude of 20,000 feet. All the pilots used liquid oxygen.

This flight was of exceptional importance, not only from a military point of view, but also because of its significance to commercial aeronautics. It was the first massed and sanctioned flight of aircraft through the upper regions of the atmosphere on the normal routine of an aerodrome, where there is little oxygen.

The army air corps has been conducting experiments in high altitude formation flying for a considerable period. Planes flying at 20,000 feet are invisible from the earth, and are usually high above the cloud bank, only the most sensitive instruments can detect their presence.

The flight demonstrated one still more fact than if Washington should be endangered by an attack, a squadron could be dispatched to the capital, arrive at Washington, drop the attacking machine guns and have sufficient ammunition left to go right into combat at the ceiling of air combat that our fliers prefer during daylight hours.

The commercial significance of the flight lies in the fact that because of the excellent engine performance at high altitudes, it is possible to carry more passengers or cargo per dollar of operation than at lower altitudes. Above 15,000 feet air temperature is constant, and the motor is not affected by changes in the weather.

Pigs Made Appreciable Gains on Cooked Beans

Ames—Iowa State college agricultural experiment station has found that the feeding of cull beans improves their feeding value for swine. The Ohio station found that freezing cooked soy beans saved 13.7 pounds feed per 100 pounds gain. In a ration including raw soy beans pigs fed 20 weeks averaged 200 pounds weight as compared with an average of 241 pounds for similar pigs on a ration including cooked soy beans fed limited to the same amount of feed. Pigs fed on the cooked ration ate less beans.

Experiments at the Colorado Agricultural college showed that the feeding of raw soy beans was responsible for a loss of 20 per cent in the daily gain. Other trials in the limit of appetite, duly were ready for market 84 days earlier than similar pigs fed raw soy beans. In these trials there proved affable, and cooked soy beans in addition to soy beans. Two many soy beans proved soft pork. The Illinois station tells us this a ration for fattening hogs should not contain over 12 per cent of soy beans, 15-0223 Dairyman.

Cholera Prevalent

Ohio is experiencing now an outbreak of hog cholera almost as extensive as that in 1930, according to reports of state veterinary authorities. Due to low prices in recent years many farmers have allowed their swine to remain unvaccinated and neglected immunization against cholera. The small community sterility sales where no supervision is found have been a source of spreading disease. Vaccination are have found, for frequently hogs with the first stages of disease are sold in these sales and taken back to farms where healthy animals are being raised.—Ohio Farmer.

Few Young Horses

There is a shortage of good, young horses and mules in the United States according to the Horse Association of America. In 1930 there were 6,500,000 horses under four years old. In 1921 there were more than 12,000,000 of this ages—a shortage of more than 4,000,000. It is estimated in the Horse association that the United States will lose more than 1,000,000 horses in 1931, while raising only a little more than 500,000.—Nebraska Farmer.

Prevent Calf Vices

When two or more calves are being fed skimmilk and are not confined in stanchions during the feeding period they often develop the habit of sucking each other's ears or sollks. Persistent sucking of heifers may later result in concealed quarters and permanent injury. Not only should the calves be confined in stanchions while having their milk but also until their faces are dry or until they have had an opportunity to eat some ground feed.—American Agriculturist.

Paid to Top Dress

Top dressing irrigated pasture with 12 tons of manure per acre increased returns $12.06 an acre at the Huntley experiment station, Yellowstone county, Montana. The unfertilized pasture was worth $23.18 an acre the first of the six years the experiment was carried on. The fertilized pasture was worth $29.04 an acre. The sixth year of the experiment the pasture that had been top dressed was worth $40.28 an acre and the one that had received no treatment $30.57 an acre.

Sees Small Profit in Cattle Feeding

If present prices prevail for next year spring, there is a chance for very little profit from cattle feeding except where the better grades of cattle are fed, concludes R. T. Burdick, associate economist at the Colorado Agricultural college.

The feeding of two-year-old steers was studied on a total of about 30 farms. Steers weighing an average of 802 pounds when purchased made an average of 295 pounds of gain in 126 days. At present prices of the feeds actually used, the lost this winter would cost $15.25 per head or $5.80 per 100 pounds of gain.

"If these same steers could be put in the feedin this fall at $5 per hundredweight," says Burdick, "charges for interest, shrink loss and miscellaneous cash items, plus use, labor, water, corrals and equipment, horse labor and succeeded would total $7.55 per head, or $2.87 per hundredweight of gain. With feed costing $6.50, the total outlay would be $13.37 per hundred weight of gain would approximate $9.72.

"Chances in feeding practice will affect this cost," he adds. "For example, one man, using alfalfa, fed steers that gain and pasture had costs at 1931 prices which totaled $4.75 per cwt. or $5 per hundredweight of gain. Others had feed costs close to this, while some had higher costs.

"Assuming average gains, an 802 pound feeder steer would sell for 795 pounds at the end of 126 days. The costs listed above would require a 9c gain of $0.09 per cwt. in the feeder or, a margin of $1.08 in power feed cost. Obviously, charges for marketing would require a higher price at the market.

"Barely saving market prices at loan use for the years 1931 to 1933 indicate that for the month of March there was an average price of $5.19 per hundredweight for all classes of beef, and $5.80 as an average for April. No reasonable price schedule for the latter months of the fattle. Climatic prices for this period were especially more than $1 per hundredweight above the reported Denver prices.

"Feeding prices, if capitalized this spring, show a situation for very little profit except where the better grades of cattle are fed, since those grades bring better prices. Individuals are not always able to secure the best of present feed economically. Some cattle feeders have reduced costs at approximately 25 per cent by using cheaper ways prices in order to show a profit."

Player Gives New Note to Usual Golf Alibi

There were two things in George Tweny's life that meant everything to him—his family and his golf. It is really difficult to understand how he managed to find time for both. At any rate, his wife and five children complained of no neglect and his golf score averaged around 78.

Tweny last won the right in regional his club in the state golf tournament. During the period preceding the final matches, Mrs. Tweny presented him with a sixth child.

Another man would either have withdrawn from all sports, or would have deserted his family at such a time. George, however, was prepared for the situation. A nursing home had been built on the front lawn of his home. Thus he could practice and his near the morgue Tweny at the same time.

One afternoon an appreciative gallery arose over to watch George do his putting. From an adjacent lot hopped the ball like the cupcake which was little short of amazing. At length he decided to try one more and call it a day. It was a simple six-footer, the kind you had been trying all afternoon.

Tweny took a stance, held his brown's straw hats his putter slowly and lovingly addressed the ball. At the moment of impact, from within the house came the agonized wail of the Tweny infant. George's wrist jerked—the spoon missed the cup by a foot.

Turning a smile, George looked at the gallery.

"You bad," he said, "I guess it's that new host!"—Kansas City Star.

Modern Girl Benefited

Nothing is more astonishing to the older generation in London than the complete disappearance in one generation of a disease which, in as a medical epidemic, was responsible in hospital practice, namely, otitemia or young girls. This was a serious form of anemia, which choked our hospitals with sufferers. In its frequency, its disappearance was practically synchronous with the disappearance of the corset and the greater freedom of bodily movements, and the increased opportunity of outdoor exercise by girls and young women, and it is a singular instance of how fashion may hinder or foster health. The very sensible exercise from London in the autumn and at week-ends is a comparatively modern invention and one contributing to better health and physique.—Sir Ernest Graham Little.

THAT COMING CONFERENCE

One of the favorite expressions of the pacifists and internationalists is that the fate of the world and humanity hangs on the next Geneva disarmament conference. If this is true then the world is truly in a bad fix and civilization can be expected to vanish next year. For, as desirable as international institution of armament by agreement might be, there is every evidence at hand now that the Geneva conference will be a failure, if it is held at all.

The present Manchurian situation has definitely demonstrated this. The action of the Japanese in going into Manchuria and the impotency of the League and the Kellogg pact have led to grave suspicion on every hand of the value of broad international commitments. Having seen what has happened in Manchuria, and how Japan has been able to flout the various powerful nations of the world, the average European nation which has any armament is going to be a little slow about giving it up. If the League and international agreements of various sorts cannot be depended on to keep the peace, just what can be depended on in this time of mutual distrust and suspicion?

The fact is that so long as there is a will to war anywhere in the world there is danger of war. A disarmament agreement will not prevent this. The thing needed is a fundamental change in human psychology. It is not to be forgotten that there were wars in the days before armored ships and guns were invented. Sink every gunboat in the world if you want to, but if trouble arises, merchant ships can be quickly armed and can kill just as many people as ironclads.

And it is to be remembered that some of the bloodiest wars in the history of the world were internal struggles, not affected by international agreements at all. Civil wars were common back in Rome and they have been exhausting in England and in Germany in days gone by. Our own civil war is a recent example, and a still more recent one is found in the troubles of China.

This is not denying the desirability of limitation of armament by international agreement. If this can be equitably done all well and good. But its principle beneficial effects will be economic and not pacific. To prevent wars we will have to eliminate human ambition and human selfishness and greed. We doubt whether a conference in Geneva or any place else on earth can accomplish this.

But to assert, as many internationalists are now doing, that "the fate of civilization" rests on the coming conference at Geneva, is unwise to say the least. For it is now apparent that such a conference if held will not succeed of its real purpose and that civilization will have to struggle on the best way it can, solving each problem as it comes along.

WHAT ABOUT THE FARM BOARD?

Should the Federal Farm Board be abolished? A good deal of loose talk on this subject is being heard in Washington and elsewhere. Because the board, even with the magic wand of Uncle Sam's long bank roll, did not stop the operation of economic law, it is denounced as futile and foolish.

A hurried burial of the Farm Board, however, would be just another mistake, according to Tom Catheart, one of the most level-headed of agricultural advisers, who wields a nation-wide influence among farmers and legislators.

"The board is too deeply involved in many important transactions to be suddenly abolished" Mr. Cathcart observes. "If it were legislated out of existence, it would be necessary to create a new board to carry on the unfinished work."

The Farm Board was created for the primary purpose of placing agriculture on an economic equality with other industries. It was given almost unlimited money and credit. Men of brains, experience and character were appointed to do its work. Tremendous authority was imposed upon it. Yet, despite all these advantages—money, brains, and unrestricted power—the record has been unhappy.

The Board minimized speculation by itself by becoming the chief speculator. The major efforts of the Board were its attempts to peg the prices of wheat and cotton. The efforts failed.

"What the Farm Board has not done", says Mr. Cathcart, "is to improve on our inefficient and wasteful methods of distribution. And for this purpose it should be retained, despite the fact that its experiments along other lines have been unprofitable and have rendered it unpopular both with business men and farmers.

"The spread between the price paid the farmer and the price paid by the consumer is as great as ever, and in spite of lower wholesale price levels, the prices paid by consumers are still incredibly large.

"Potatoes which pay the producer fifty cents a barrel are retailed for ten or twelve times as much. Farmers get three cents a quart for milk, consumers pay sixteen.

"The Farm Board can properly devote itself to studying inefficient and wasteful methods of distribution."

FIRE FIGHTING—FIRE PREVENTION

It is an organized activity, reaching into every department of community life. Adequate water supplies are demanded. Equipment has been developed to an extremely high level of efficiency. Fire chiefs study their work exactly as physicians or lawyers study in preparation for practice of their professions.

It may be that the scientific exactness of modern fire fighting has to a degree dulled our sensibilities in the matter of prevention. Few fires nowadays get out of hand. But—it should be realized—every fire entails waste of many kinds. Every fire entails expense to the community—and to every individual who lives or works in that community. Almost every fire could have been prevented.

It is a better thing to prevent a fire than to put one out after it has started. Today a good fire department makes prevention its most important activity. It inspects homes, enlists the cooperation of businesses, suggests safeguards. But this work has been sadly hampered—as has the work of those private organizations which labor for fire prevention—by public apathy. There are thousands of homes and buildings in which new wiring is needed, in which rubbish has been allowed to accumulate here and there, in which gasoline and similar household explosives are mishandled. Many of the owners of such properties know this—and do nothing. They may have the best intentions in the world, they may plan on taking the necessary steps for safety "some"—but that is of little benefit when the blaze starts.

Fire prevention is a duty an individual owes to his community. When that idea is firmly implanted in the public mind, the war against fire will be a success.

INDIVIDUALISTS SOME OF THE TIME

Dr Beard is not a friend of the individualist —and he devotes much of his article to showing that many ventures of government into business—such as waterways, barge lines, shipping aviation, canals, the farm board and so on—have come about principally at the demand of groups of business men. It is an interesting recital. Many of these men would be the first to rise and howl in righteous anger if the government tampering with somebody else's, if it seems to be in their own selfish interest.

Business men who have sought to impel government into business are the greatest enemies of true individualism. They provide such able critics of the existing order as Dr. Beard, with the best of sure-fire ammunition. They are responsible for the growth of political dictatorships, paternalism, bureaucracy. They menace our economic and social system of which they are a part—and which they hypocritically pretend to support. Friends of real individualism can hold no brief for them.

WHERE ADVERTISING GOT RESULTS

California growers of citrus fruits know that advertising coupled with good merchandising gets the money even in years of so-called depression. Their crop this year was 48 per cent greater than that of last year. What to do? They answered this question by cooperatively marketing the fruit and advertising it to such an extent that a greatly increased demand was developed among the American people for oranges, lemons and grapefruit, with the gratifying result to the growers that they received $99,500,000 for their 1930-1931 crop. Total shipments of these fruits from California exceeded 83,000 cars.

The reports show that in the 1930-1931 season the American public consumed 167,000 cars of citrus fruits as compared with 113,000 in the previous year and 158,000 cars in the peak boom season of 1928-1929. The last season's advertising appropriation for the principal citrus fruit growers' organization was the largest in its history, and that, you understand in the midst of what was considered a very sizeable depression. Incidentally this same organization during the several years of its existence has spent more than $15,000,000 in advertising.

If you have the goods to sell at the prices to sell it, advertising of the right kind will bring the customers.

THE FOOD PROBLEM

All persons interested in keeping healthy, and particularly the parents of growing children, should be thoroughly informed as to the value of milk as a food.

It would seem that the constant advices of doctors, health officers and similar authorities should have resulted in adequate milk consumption. But use of it, on the average, is still below the desirable point. A quart of milk will supply 675 calories—about a third of the day's need of a child of ten, and about a quarter of the day's need of a grown person. It contains, in generous amounts, the three vitamins A, C and D which are absolutely essential to bodily well-being. It likewise contains three of the important minerals needed by the body—calcium, phosphorus and iron. And it contains proteins whose chief work is to build tissue in the body.

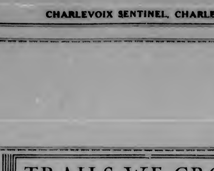
TRAILS WE CROSS

By JAMES W. BROOKS



THE BEGINNING POINT OF A GREAT JOURNALIST

In this old house, still standing at East Poultney, Vt and reached via a side run from Rutland, Horace Greeley learned the printers trade. What he did after he had mastered the art of movable types is written large in the annals of American political history.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

By FRANK P. LITSCHERT

There are a great many people in America nowadays who seem to have lost faith in the future of the country completely. They apparently believe that all leadership is lost, politically and economically, that America has been deprived of its inventive genius and its courage, that all consumers in the United States are supplied with everything they will need for all time to come and that consequently there is no hope for development in the future. All of those of little faith might get some tonic effect from reading an address given a few days ago before the Boston Chamber of Commerce by Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America. In touching on this spirit of defeatism Mr. Hays said:

"America can never face a permanent unemployment situation or loss of basic wealth until opportunity and ambition dissolve partnership. As an example of how in the past we have created resources where none existed, to help stoke the banked fires of initiative and enterprise, I direct your attention to the motion picture industry. Subtract the wealth created by the motion picture, radio and the automobile from America's income and you must look to your balance sheet. Yet these vast industrial enquiries have been added to our national estate in virtually twenty years. Opportunity in democracy is never a monopoly of the few—or the exclusive friend of any particular generation.

"And there are still enough new ideas over the hills ahead waiting to be cultivated, to furnish jobs and opportunity to six millions or to sixty millions. Ideas so stupendous that even contemporary open-mindedness can no more estimate their earning power than our grandfathers could reconcile experience with the telegraph or telephone."

Anybody who will stop for a moment to think will recognize the truth and significance of these statements of the former Postmaster General. It cannot be that in two brief years, American genius and enterprise have been completely dried up. The forces which perfected our great industrial enterprises are still at work. This country is not surfeited with new things. Many things are coming within the next few years, like the radio, the motion picture, the automobile and the airplane came during the last generation, and they will be just as much in demand from the American people as were these achievements of the present era. We are now going through a process of readjustment, necessary because we tried to travel too fast and to take the whole world on our shoulders instead of looking after America first. These adjustments will be completed finally, and then we will move forward once more.

There has been of late a noticeable change in the attitude of the professional business haiters, the men who thought that the way to make themselves popular and to help the farmer and the laborer was to cripple and destroy American industry, which furnished employment to labor and gave it the wages with which to buy the products of the farmer. These business haiters have found that crippling business does not work out as they had an idea it would, and now, having succeeded in hamstringing it with paternalistic laws and regulations, they find that they have well nigh ruined the farmer and the workingman, and everyone else as well. As a result there has been a change of attitude, and if, as now seems more probable, the tendency in Congress and the state legislatures from now on will be to help rather than cripple business, the process of readjustment will have been quickened considerably. As Mr. Hays says further on in his admirable address: "No one would suggest that legislation yield its right to interpose upon business reasonable conditions, clearly in the public interest. It only urge that the method employed shall be such as to cause the result to coincide with the intent. I ask for reasonable freedom for American business to keep itself abreast of changing conditions and to erect a more stable edifice of prosperity." With that suggestion no reasonable, right thinking American will have any quarrel.

THE SPOTTED PROTECTIONISTS ARE WORRIED

By George E. Lockwood

A Washington dispatch to the New York Times says that while Democrats now control the House, and in combination with the so-called Progressives, control the Senate also—in other words despite the fact that there is an anti-protection majority in both houses — the leaders are "reluctant" to take the problem of tariff revision.

For many moons Democratic and Progressive leaders have been sending the air with their outcry against the existing tariff law. To it they have attributed in public most of our economic ills. Now they have the power to substitute for the law one of their own making. Still they are "reluctant". They are reluctant because the passing of a new tariff law would compel them to convert their wild generalities into specific action. And while an anti-protection congressman does not at all object to destructive foreign cheap labor competition in districts or states he does not represent, a decent regard for his own political health does not permit him to strike a blow at the business enterprises and wage earners of his own district by exposing their output to the cheap labor competition of the whole world.

It is stated that Senator Hayden of Arizona, and Senator Wheeler, of Montana, would like to see a tariff placed on copper. With the copper mines and smelters of their states shut down, and thousands of men out of work because they cannot compete with labor in the Katanga district of the Belgian Congo, where $7.50 per month is top wages, it is naturally that these statesmen should not be so keen about keeping copper on the free list. If these copper mines were in Indiana or Vermont, their consciences would rebel against placing a tariff on copper, since the unemployed in those states could not vote against them.

And these Two Democratic leaders are in the same situation as many other senators of their political faith. There is Senator Thomas of Oklahoma, who can see the infamies of protection as applied to the industries of other parts of the country, but who is faced in his own state with thousands of idle workers who cannot comprehend the statesmanship involved in keeping oil on the free list, even under this "infamously high" tariff law. Of course if these oil fields were in New England, the Senator from Oklahoma would shout himself hoarse against the wrong committed against the consumers of gasoline by refusing them the right to buy where they can buy the cheapest.

Even newly elected Speaker of the House, Mr. Garner, of Texas, faced a battle between principle and interest some few years ago. His district is one of the chief producers of a variety of wool which needed protection against imports from the cheap lands and cheap labor of South America and other foreign parts. In fact, Mr. Garner raised just the sort of wool in quantity on his own estate. So while talking against protection on one side of his face, Mr. Garner lifted his voice on the other side for what he and his constituents produce. If these sheep had been grazing in Michigan instead of Texas, Mr. Garner would have been able to recognize the infamy of giving their wool protection.

Everybody is able to recognize the selfishness of a protectionism which wants a tariff on what it has to sell and free trade on what it wants to buy. This is, indeed, the use of the protective policy to promote special interests. That sort of "spotted protectionism," as the Senator Bradley of Kentucky used to call it, is of course not confined to the Democratic side of the House and Senate. There are plenty of so-called protectionists on the Republican side, such as the Northwestern progressives who want higher tariff rates on all farm products, and want to strike down manufacturing industry and the best customers of the American farmer along with it, by giving our markets over to the cheap labor output of European and Asiatic wage-earners. There are equally selfish sectional Easterners who want a tariff on manufactured products, but who want to buy raw materials and foodstuffs in the cheapest labor markets of the world without tariff interference. All such bipartisan "protectionism" as this represents sectionalism, and it was alle when the present tariff law was passed to defeat tariff rates which if, in effect, would put to work in this country immediately several million Americans now unemployed.

DEALING WITH EUROPE

American public sentiment stands like a rock against cancellation, for two reasons: the debts would have to be assumed by American taxpayers; and European debtor nations are spending huge sums on armaments while trying to evade payment of their debts. It is now disclosed that the British ambassador to Japan threw out a broad hint to the Tokyo government, suggesting the postponement of the disarmament conference which has been set to meet at Geneva on February 2. Disclosure of this secret note is followed by a disclaimer that Britain favors postponement; but it is evident that if Japan had favored postponement Britain would have taken the same position.

No real step toward reduction of armaments is to be expected at Geneva, in view of France's avowed determination to hold its armed forces intact unless the nations will agree to aid any nation menaced by aggressive war. But the conference should be held, nevertheless, since it is high time that the attitude of the leading nations should be made plain. If they are resolved not to reduce armaments, the United States should know the truth: it will then put an end once for all to the pleas for reduction or cancellation of debts.

The extension of the present moratorium for another year is hardly to be expected, in view of the impending failure of the disarmament conference. President Hoover could not expect favorable action by Congress on another moratorium resolution if in the meantime the heavily armed nations owing debts to this country had refused to take even the first step toward curtailment of armaments.

If anything has been made clear during the last six or seven months it is the fact that European debtors can pay if they really wish to pay. They can mutually reduce military expenditures if they really wish to do so. The disarmament conference will force this fact upon the world. It is well that the American delegation should be headed by Charles G. Dawes, whose force and ability are such that he can be neither deceived nor wheedled into making concessions to nations that are devoting to needless armaments the money with which they should pay debts. But for the fact that the disarmament conference will be useful in exposing the true position of European debtors it would be better for all governments to call off the conference, since nothing practical in the way of reduction of armaments is to be accomplished.

Internationalists and cancellationists assert that the United States has no appreciation of "realities" in dealing with Europe. The truth is that Americans have a clear sense of realities, and are not in the least likely to be hood-winked by the sinister moves made in Europe for the purpose of overreaching this country.—Washington Post.

THAT COMING CONFERENCE

One of the favorite expressions of the pacifists and internationalists is that the fate of the world will be decided by the next Geneva disarmament conference. If this is true then the world is truly in a bad fix and civilization can be expected to vanish next year. For, as desirable as international cessation of armament by agreement might be, there is every evidence at hand now that the Geneva conference will be a failure, if it is held at all.

The present Manchurian situation has definitely demonstrated this. The action of the Japanese in going into Manchuria and the impotency of the League and the Kellogg pact have led to grave suspicion on every hand of the value of broad international commitments. Having seen what has happened in Manchuria, and how Japan has been able to flout the various powerful nations of the world, the average European nation which has any armament is going to be a little slow about giving it up. If the League and international agreements of various sorts cannot be depended on to keep the peace, just what can be depended on in this line of mutual and universal disarmament?

The fact is that so long as there is a will to war anywhere in the world there is danger of war. A disarmament agreement will not prevent this. The thing needed is a fundamental change in human psychology. It is not to be forgotten that there were wars in the days before armored ships and guns were invented. Sink every gunboat on the world if you want to, but if trouble arises, merchant ships can be quickly armed and can kill just as many people as ironclads.

And it is to be remembered that some of the bloodiest wars in the history of the world were internal struggles, not effected by international agreements at all. Civil wars were common back in Rome and they have been exhausting in England and in Germany in days gone by. Our own civil war is a recent example, and a still more recent one is found in the troubles of China.

This is not denying the desirability of limitation of armament by international agreement. If this can be equitably done all well and good. But its principle beneficial effects will be economic and not pacific. To prevent wars we will have to eliminate human ambition and human selfishness and greed. We doubt whether a conference in Geneva or any place else on earth can accomplish this.

But to assert, as many internationalists are now doing, that "the fate of civilization" rests on the coming conference at Geneva, is unwise to say the least. For it is now apparent that such a conference if held will not succeed of its real purpose and that civilization will have to struggle on the best way it can, solving each problem as it comes along.

WHAT ABOUT THE FARM BOARD?

Should the Federal Farm Board be abolished? A good deal of loose talk on this subject is being heard in Washington and elsewhere. Because the board, even with the magic wand of Uncle Sam's long bank roll, did not stop the operation of economic law, it is denounced as futile and foolish.

A hurried burial of the Farm Board, however, would be just another mistake, according to Tom Cathcart, one of the most level-headed of agricultural advisers, who wields a nation-wide influence among farmers and legislators.

"The board is too deeply involved in many important transactions to be suddenly abolished" Mr. Cathcart observes. "If it were legislated out of existence, it would be necessary to create a new board to carry on the unfinished work."

The Farm Board was created for the primary purpose of placing agriculture on an economic equality with other industries. It was given almost unlimited money and credit. Men of brains, experience and character were appointed to do its work. Tremendous authority was imposed upon it. Yet, despite all these advantages—money, brains, and unrestricted power—the record has been unhappy.

The Board minimized speculation by itself by becoming the chief speculator. The major efforts of the Board were its attempts to peg the prices of wheat and cotton. The efforts failed.

"What the Farm Board has not done", says Mr. Cathcart, "is to improve on our inefficient and wasteful methods of distribution. And for this purpose it should be retained, despite the fact that its experiments along other lines have been unprofitable and have rendered it unpopular both with business men and farmers.

"The spread between the price paid the farmer and the price paid by the consumer is as great as ever, and in spite of lower wholesale price levels, the prices paid by consumers are still incredibly large.

"Potatoes which pay the producer fifty cents a barrel are retailed for ten or twelve times as much. Farmers get three cents a quart for milk, consumers pay sixteen.

"The Farm Board can properly devote itself to studying inefficient and wasteful methods of distribution."

FIRE FIGHTING—FIRE PREVENTION

It is an organized activity, reaching into every department of community life. Adequate water supplies are demanded. Equipment has been developed to an extremely high level of efficiency. Fire chiefs study their work exactly as physicians or lawyers study in preparation for practice of their professions.

It may be that the scientific exactness of modern fire fighting has to a degree dulled our sensibilities in the matter of prevention. Few fires nowadays get out of hand. But—it should be realized—every fire entails waste of many kinds. Every fire entails expense to the community—and to every individual who lives or works in that community. Almost every fire could have been prevented.

It is a better thing to prevent a fire than to put one out after it has started. Today a good fire department makes prevention its most important activity. It inspects homes, enlists the cooperation of businesses, suggests safeguards. But this work has been sadly hampered—as has the work of those private organizations which labor for fire prevention—by public apathy. There are thousands of homes and buildings in which new wiring is needed, in which rubbish has been allowed to accumulate here and there, in which gasoline and similar household explosives are mishandled. Many of the owners of such properties know this—and do nothing. They may have the best intentions in the world, they may plan on taking the necessary steps for safety "soon"—but that is of little benefit when the blaze starts.

Fire prevention is a duty an individual owes to his community. When that idea is firmly implanted in the public mind, the war against fire will be a success.

INDIVIDUALISTS SOME OF THE TIME

Dr. Beard is not a friend of the individualist—and he devotes much of his article to showing that many ventures of government into business—such as waterways, barge lines, shipping aviation, canals, the farm board and so on—have come about principally at the demand of groups of business men. It is an interesting recital. Many of these men would be the first to rise and howl in righteous anger if the government tampering with somebody else's, if it seems to be in their own selfish interest.

Business men who have sought to impel government into business are the greatest enemies of true individualism. They provide such able critics of the existing order as Dr. Beard, with the best of sure-fire ammunition. They are responsible for the growth of political dictatorships, paternalism, bureaucracy. They menace our economic and social system of which they are a part—and which they hypocritically pretend to support. Friends of real individualism can hold no brief for them.

WHERE ADVERTISING GOT RESULTS

California growers of citrus fruits know that advertising coupled with good merchandising gets the money even in years of so-called depression. Their crop this year was 45 per cent greater than that of last year. What to do? They answered this question by cooperatively marketing the fruit and advertising it to such an extent that a greatly increased demand was developed among the American people for oranges, lemons and grapefruit, with the gratifying result to the growers that they received $99,500,000 for their 1930-1931 crop. Total shipments of these fruits from California exceeded 83,000 cars.

The reports show that in the 1930-1931 season the American public consumed 167,000 cars of citrus fruits as compared with 111,000 in the previous year and 158,000 cars in the peak boom season of 1928-1929. The last season's advertising appropriation for the principal citrus fruit growers' organization was the largest in its history, and that, you understand in the midst of what was considered a very miserable depression. Incidentally this same organization during the several years of its existence has spent more than $15,000,000 in advertising.

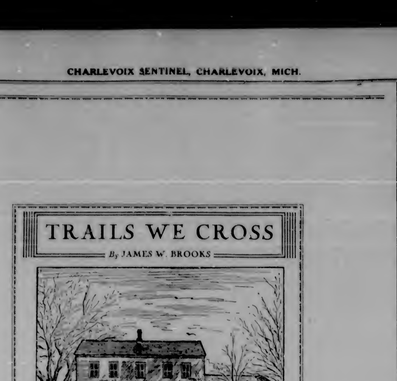
If you have the goods to sell at the prices to sell it, advertising of the right kind will bring the customers.

THE FOOD PROBLEM

All persons interested in keeping healthy, and particularly the parents of growing children, should be thoroughly informed as to the value of milk as a food.

It would seem that the constant advices of doctors, health officers and similar authorities should have resulted in adequate milk consumption. But use of it, on the average, is still below the desirable point. A quart of milk will supply 675 calories—about a third of the day's need of a child of ten, and about a quarter of the day's need of a grown person. It contains, in generous amounts, the three vitamins A, C and D which are absolutely essential to bodily well-being. It likewise contains three of the important minerals needed by the body—calcium, phosphorus and iron. And it contains proteins whose chief work is to build tissue in the body.

Tire makers have cut the prices of their product from 10 to 19 per cent. In other words, tires are still being deflated.



In this old house, still standing at East Dorset, Vt and reached via a side run from Rutland, Horace Greeley learned the printers trade. What he did after he had mastered the art of movable types is written large in the annals of American political history.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

By FRANK P. LITSCHERT

There are a great many people in America nowadays who seem to have lost faith in the future of the country completely. They apparently believe that all leadership is lost, politically and economically, that America has been deprived of its inventive genius and its courage, that all consumers in the United States are supplied with everything they will need for all time to come and that consequently there is no hope for development in the future. All of those of little faith might get some tonic effect from reading an address given a few days ago before the Boston Chamber of Commerce by Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America. In touching on the spirit of defeatism Mr. Hays said:

"America can never face a permanent unemployment situation or loss of basic wealth until opportunity and ambition dissolve partnership. As an example of how in the past we have created resources where none existed, to help stoke the hanked fires of initiative and enterprise, I direct your attention to the motion picture industry. Subtract the wealth created by the motion picture, radio and the automobile from America's income and you must look to your balance sheet. Yet those vast industrial empires have been added to our national estate in virtually twenty years. Opportunity in democracy is never a monopoly of the few—or the exclusive friend of any particular generation.

"And there are still enough new ideas over the hills ahead waiting to be cultivated, to furnish jobs and opportunity to six millions or to sixty millions. Ideas so stupendous that even contemporary open-mindedness can no more estimate their earning power than our grandfathers could reconcile experience with the telegraph or telephone."

Anybody who will stop for a moment to think will recognize the truth and significance of these statements of the former Postmaster General. It cannot be that in two brief years, American genius and enterprise have been completely dried up. The forces which perfected our great industrial enterprises are still at work. This country is not surfeited with new things. Many things are coming within the next few years, like the radio, the motion picture, the automobile and the airplane came during the last generation, and they will be just as much in demand from the American people as were these achievements of the present era. We are now going through a process of readjustment, necessary because we tried to travel too fast and to take the whole world on our shoulders instead of looking after America first. These adjustments will be completed finally, and then we will move forward once more.

There has been of late a noticeable change in the attitude of the professional business loafers, the men who thought it was smart to make themselves popular and to help the farmer and the laborer was to cripple and destroy American industry, which furnished employment to labor and gave it the wages with which to buy the products of the farmer. These business loafers have found that crippling business does not work out as they had an idea it would, and now, having succeeded in hamstringing it with paternalistic laws and regulations, they find that they have well nigh ruined the farmer and the workingman, and everyone else as well. As a result there has been a change of attitude, and if, as now seems more probable, the tendency in Congress and the state legislatures from now on will be to help rather than cripple business, the prospects of readjustment will have been quickened considerably. As Mr. Hays says further on in his admirable address: "No one would suggest that legislation yield its right to interpose upon business reasonable conditions, clearly in the public interest. I only urge that the method employed shall be such as to cause the result to coincide with the intent. I ask for reasonable freedom for American business to keep itself abreast of changing conditions and to erect a more stable edifice of prosperity." With that suggestion no reasonable, right thinking American will have any quarrel.

By George R. Lockwood

A Washington dispatch to the New York Times says that while Democrats now control the House, and in combination with the so-called Progressives, control the Senate also—in other words despite the fact that there is an anti-protection majority in both houses — the leaders are "reluctant" to tackle the problem of tariff revision.

For many moons Democratic and Progressive leaders have been rending the air with their outcry against the existing tariff law. To it they have attributed in public most of our economic ills. Now they have the power to substitute for the law one of their own making. Still they are "reluctant". They are reluctant because the passing of a new tariff law would compel them to convert their wild generalities into specific action. And while an anti-protection congressman does not at all object to destructive foreign cheap labor competition in districts or states he does not represent, a decent regard for his own political health does not permit him to strike a blow at the business enterprise and wage earners of his own district by exposing their output to the cheap labor competition of the whole world.

It is stated that Senator Hayden of Arizona, and Senator Wheeler, of Montana, would like to see a tariff placed on copper. With the copper mines and smelters of their states shut down, and thousands of men out of work because they cannot compete with labor in the Katanga district of the Belgian Congo, where $7.50 per month is top wages, it is naturally that these statesmen should not be so keen about keeping copper on the free list. If these copper mines were in Indiana or Vermont, their consciences would rebel against placing a tariff on copper, since the unemployed in these states could not vote against them.

And these two Democratic leaders are in the same situation as many other senators of their political faith. There is Senator Thomas of Oklahoma, who can see the infamies of protection as applied to the industries of other parts of the country, but who is faced in his own state with thousands of idle workers who cannot comprehend the statesmanship involved in keeping oil on the free list, even under this "infamously high" tariff law. Of course if these oil fields were

THE BABY

By George MacDonald.

Where did you come from baby dear?
Out of the everywhere into here.

Where did you get that little tear?
I found it in waiting when I got here

What makes your forehead so smooth and high?
A soft hand stroked it as I went by.

What makes your cheek like a warm white rose?
I saw something better than anyone knows.

Where that three-cornered smile of bliss?
Three angels gave me at once a kiss.

Where did you get that pretty ear?
God spoke and it came out to hear.

Where did you get those arms and hands?
Love made itself into hooks and bands.

Feet, where did you come, you darling things?
From the same box as the cherub's wings.

How did they all come just to be you?
God thought of me and so I grew.

But how did you come to us, you dear?
God thought about you and so I am here.

Editorial Comment

in New England, the Senator from Oklahoma would shout himself hoarse against the wrong committed against the consumers of gasoline by refusing them the right to buy where they can buy the cheapest.

Even newly elected Speaker of the House, Mr. Garner, of Texas, faced a battle between principle and interest some few years ago. His district is one of the chief producers of a variety of wool which needed protection against imports from the cheap lands and cheap labor of South America and other foreign parts. In fact, Mr. Garner raised just the sort of wool in quantity on his own estate. So while talking against protection on one side of his face, Mr. Garner lifted his voice on the other side for what he and his constituents produce. If these sheep had been grazing in Michigan instead of Texas, Mr. Garner would have been able to recognize the infamy of giving their wool protection.

Everybody is able to recognize the selfishness of a protectionism which wants a tariff on what it has to sell and free trade on what it wants to buy. This is, indeed, the axe of the protective policy to promote special interests. That sort of "spotted protectionism," as the Senator Bradley of Kentucky used to call it, is of course not confined to the Democratic side of the House and Senate. There are plenty of so-called protectionists on the Republican side, such as the Northwestern progressives who want higher tariff rates on all farm products, and want to strike down manufacturing industry and the best customers of the American farmer along with it, by giving our markets over to the cheap labor output of European and Asiatic wage-earners. There are equally selfish sectional Easterners who want a tariff on manufactured products, but who want to buy raw materials and foodstuffs in the cheapest labor markets of the world without tariff interference. All such bipartisan "protectionism" as this represents sectionalism, and it was able when the present tariff law was passed to defeat tariff rates which if, in effect, would put to work in this country immediately several million Americans now unemployed.

DEALING WITH EUROPE

American public sentiment stands like a rock against cancellation, for two reasons: the debts would have to be assumed by American taxpayers; and European debtor nations are spending huge sums on armaments while trying to evade payment of their debts. It is now disclosed that the British ambassador to Japan threw out a broad hint to the Tokyo government, suggesting the postponement of the disarmament conference which has been set to meet at Geneva on February 2. Disclosure of this secret note is followed by a disclaimer that Britain favors postponement; but it is evident that if Japan had favored postponement Britain would have taken the same position.

No real step toward reduction of armaments is to be expected at Geneva, in view of France's avowed determination to hold its armed forces intact unless the nations will agree to aid any nation menaced by aggressive war. But the conference should be held, nevertheless, since it is high time that the attitude of the leading nations should be made plain. If they are resolved not to reduce armaments, the United States should know the truth. It will then put an end once for all to the pleas for reduction or cancellation of debts.

The extension of the present moratorium for another year is hardly to be expected, in view of the impending failure of the disarmament conference. President Hoover could not expect favorable action by Congress on another mortorium resolution if in the meantime the heavily armed nations owing debts to this country had refused to take even the first step toward curtailment of armaments.

If anything has been made clear during the last six or seven months it is the fact that European debtors can pay if they really wish to pay. They can mutually reduce military expenditures if they really wish to do so. The disarmament conference will force this fact upon the world. It is well that the American delegation should be headed by Charles G. Dawes, whose force and ability are such that he can be neither deceived nor wheedled into making concessions to nations that are devoting to needless armaments the money with which they should pay debts. But for the fact that the disarmament conference will be useful in exposing the true position of European debtors it would be better for all governments to call off the conference, since nothing practical in the way of reduction of armaments is to be accomplished.

Internationalists and cancellationists assert that the United States has no appreciation of "realities" in dealing with Europe. The truth is that Americans have a clear sense of realities, and are not in the least likely to be hood-winked by the sinister moves made in Europe for the purpose of overreaching this country.—Washington Post.

Excellent Maxims for the Conduct of Life

My code of life and conduct is simply this, George Jean Nathan writes, in the forum and Century. Work hard; play in the allowable limit, disregard equally the good or bad opinion of others; never do a friend a dirty trick; eat and drink what you feel like when you feel like; never grow indignant over anything; read in tobacco for calm and serenity; bathe twice a day; modify the esthetic philosophy of Count Bai slightly with that of Bonington and achieve for oneself a genuinely sufficient life in the sun of the pathetic fallacy.

Learn to play at least one musical instrument and then play it only in private, never allow oneself more a passing thought of death; never contradict anyone or seek to prove anything to anyone unless one is paid for it in cash, hard coin; live the assault at the utmost of its possibilities; treat one's enemies with politeness and one's friends with courtesy. He is tolerant from prison to a psychological clinic, but not from both; sex; not for Hollywood cocoa. The only way to get rid of temptation, Oscar Wilde said in this matter, is to yield to it, and he stated by his life, his works and his conversation, but Oscar, in error.

An infinite belief in the possibilities of another day, a sensitive disdain, assessment and derogation of one's environment; extravagance combined with a measure of self-surgery; aristocracy of mind combined with democracy of heart; forthrightness with modesty or at least with good manners; dignity with a quiet laugh; humor and honesty and decency—these are the greatest qualities that man can hope to attain. And on one man, my hope is to attain them.

Living Characters Used on Ancient Chessboard

The Mongol emperors of India carried out some strange pranks in connection with their domestic life, and a visitor to the famous fort in Agra will be able to see some of the beautiful buildings used as part of the setting. One of the most interesting features is the open square in the center of the fort, known as the Ankuri Bagh. This square is divided into many squares, marked off by marble slabs, and covered with green grass. There are broad marble causeways between the squares. Across it, at certain times, the Mogul emperors used to play as chess boards, and the "pieces" used to be the girls were young slaves, who changed their positions according to the directions of the players, who would remain in one of the marble pavilions. The chief players in these days did not correspond with the modern ones, but was known as pachesi. The size of the Ankuri Bagh is about 350 feet square.

The other one is not quite so funny but just as humorous:

"A member hailing from the Emerald Isle, criticizing the parsimonious conduct of the South African war, said 'Is it fair, sir, that we should take out most slaughtered at the front, and then expect them to live on six pence a day when they get back?'—Detroit News.

THE STORY

In New Orleans, in 1831, Louis Garde, orphaned an officer under General Jackson, is received by the appearance, in Madam Sparks' exclusive of two men and a woman whose beauty enchants him, arousing his strongest desire. The attitude of the two men, Garde's fellow officers, is hostile. Despite his interest he espouses a cause of Mlle. Fuentes, exiled in the Spanish army in Venezuela. Garde overhears a plot to assassinate Bolivar, who is in Caracas, and, aroused to fight, but in court-martialed and made prisoner of the Garde Lancers, who inspire great fear. Garde's sentence is delayed by the consideration of his father and his love, but together the two plot to overthrow Ferdinand. The girl, Garde learns for cause in Count Lamorciere. He loves her but does not reveal his love. The result is wretched. Garde reaches the Venezuelan camp during the absence of Bolivar, who is in the Andes. The struggle for the independence of the Spanish colonies in South America is complicated by the jealousy of the patriots, for in addition to the struggle against the Spaniards there is the struggle among the patriots themselves for the control of the various republics. Garde is assigned to the staff of Paez, the ablest of the patriot generals, who is in command of the Venezuelan army. Garde, in love with Lamorciere, and hating Fuentes who is in love with her, is torn between his duty to his country and his love for Lamorciere. Garde is sent to Bolivar with a message from Paez. He escapes Fuentes there, learns that Fuentes was to have been the assassin of Bolivar, and that the assassin's last moment was Garde to make sure that Fuentes was to have been the assassin. Garde, in the assassin's last moment was Garde to make sure that Fuentes was to have been the assassin. Garde, in error.

I had seen so much of violence and of death since landing in this unhappy country that, already, I had become hardened, welcomed, as that I seemed to be only an onlooker in this, my own existence; and I found myself taking very little interest in it. I found one effectual regret that I had come so near to love's fulfillment—and had failed. Yet I had taken her away from the Spaniards . . . and she had put her fine face into my hands. I smiled at the thought of her unquietness. Had I persuaded her daytime caution how unmerited that silver night would have been. Well, I had won a person of her love. I longed that reconciliation to me burst as the unquiet refusal gives a curt order that caused the two Indians to relocate me and to stand close to me around bullet might not find them.

"I am ready, Senor," said I.

"I want you to know," he said slow ly, his eyes upon the fine bay horse that had carried me from Caracas, "that I believe every word you have told me. I believe you are Louis Garde an American, and that you have come to offer service to General Bolivar. I believe Manuel sent you here, and that he furnished the money for you; but your sort in his position—you asking—the Spanish officer to escape confession you. It makes no difference who he is, he is a Spanish officer your life is forfeit. The men of Bolivar must be made of sterner stuff. I am sure his excellency would have made short work of you are. If there is something you wish to say . . ."

A few lateness had gathered to watch the execution, and one, a tall commanding figure that seemed to radiate, disengaged itself from the group.

"Francisco," I cried, "Francisco Paves . . . Ajud!" Though I had fought it a shouting patriot as every turn, I was sure he stood my friend. "It is it!" he asked.

"It is I, Garde—San Isidro. Juan's you remember me? I was on the Santa Lucrecia, and in New Orleans. I have dyed my hair."

Francisco strode forward, a half smile softening the grim lines of his face. He held up his hand. "Wait, Colonel Pilsi," he said; "I know this man."

A young member having remarked the preparation of a most successful motion speech, he concluded, 'And now I hope I have made it clear to honorable members opposite that we who sit on this side are not quite such fools as we look!'

CHAPTER VII

Simon Bolivar

As the three of us rode slowly down the lanes toward Caracas, Henri Bolivar had his headmasters. I gave to Francisco an account of all that had befallen since the wagon had rent me into the jungle. The sun was high when we approached at last the important town of Guanaguana, which, because of the presence of the Liberator, had assumed an aspect of great importance.

Bolivar had become, in my imagination, a sort of superhuman influence, a martial barrier-rent upon which the attacks of Spain had broken and spent their force. I employed what manner of man he was this being to whom the eyes of Venezuela were turned in fervent hope for whom safety and success prayers had been offered up in secret thousands of homes whose names were sung with patriotic ardor to compel their lives in his service, and who has been called, in our own brilliant Henry Clay, the "Washington of South America."

"There he is!" Francisco cried.

Before us lay a spacious, green park, home with orchard and and pillared porch, the home, no doubt, of some prosperous Spanish planter. Lamorciere—a tall, handsome man—stood beside one of the massive stone columns. Just what I had expected to find a person of enormous size I do not know, unless it be that I could not imagine so many units of greatness, so many talents, in a man of normal proportions.

"Is that Bolivar?" I asked. And I had come to offer services to him!

Francisco smiled at the extent concern in my voice. "The Smiling, my friend Garde. Judges one by the width of one's hips, or the resonance of one's voice, for the hostess only sings or sings. The giant mind, my friend, sets not the body of a giant."

"The man, Francisco," I agreed, "for, had I surrendered my sources has said my brain since I should not have spent my life in foolish disturbings."

Dismounting, I walked between the republican officers toward the house, and Bolivar descended the low rise to greet and stood, waiting, on the flagstones.

They released my arms, and I offered unconscious salute. His keen black eyes went over me in swift scrutiny. He radiated a virtual sort of energy that seemed to deafen my faculties.

At last he spoke, and I noticed that his voice, though a trifle harsh, was musical. "It would seem, Pilsi, that the soldiers of Spain are improving."

"Aye, General," said Colonel Pilsi. He considered my awkward height and, I suspect, the comfortable look of my shoulders, then he turned to Francisco: "If we had a thousand like that . . ."

He Radiated a Vibrant Sort of Energy That Seemed to Deaden My Faculties.

Plimsoll Deserving of Title "Seamen's Friend"

By agreement among several of the more important maritime nations of the world, the Plimsoll line, marking the safe loading point for vessels, has come almost into universal use. It has been the means of saving the lives of thousands of seamen. Before Samuel Plimsoll made his stand for humanity, seamen were at the mercy of avoidedly owners who thought only in terms of insurance. No thought of the men who would go down with their ships stayed their hands.

"They came Samuel Plimsoll, "The Seamen's Friend." He had been prosperous; he had known disaster. From a position of affluence he had come to comfort lodging house. To them he saw seamen and learned their stories. His was roused to a great anger, and there and then took an oath that he would never rest until he had removed the villainy of the "sharp owners."

He knew that before he could achieve anything he had to get into parliament. That meant money. Out of the pit of poverty he climbed. He was elected to parliament and devoted his energies to the measure he had surprised for saving the lives of the seamen. In the face of violent opposition he prevailed and the measure became a law requiring a mark on the hull indicating the safety loading line.

Trippers to Sorrento

After than Rome, Sorrento, in Italy, goes back to the day of Greek mythology. It was a Phoenician emporium under their Tyre. Its name came from the famous sirens, and its power to lure men, and women, too, is as great today. Here Tasso was born and here lived Goethe, Scott, Marion Crawford and many others. Steps stayed at this inn on the Piazza Tasso and finished his "Peer Gynt," and wrote "Ghosts" here. Wagner, Byron, Scott, Cooper, Dumas, Verdi, Hugo, Longfellow, Barnes-Lyon, Ibsen, Wilde, and Nietzsche all have made this city, so lovely in the little town of the siren by the sea.

Football and Chemistry

Football was indirectly responsible for making Sir William Ramsay one of the world's greatest chemists. When as a youth his leg was broken in a gridiron scrimmage, he read Graham's Chemistry through, partly to relieve the tedium of convalescence but more particularly to find out how to make benzoate. On his recovery he became a passionate chemical experimenter. For the next four years his bedroom was full of bottles and test-tubes and often of strange odors and startling noises.—Chic Logly.

"Mike" Centenary Noted

London has observed the one-hundredth anniversary of the birth of David Hughes, inventor of the microphone. It was recalled that Hughes was the first man to transmit and receive signals via the ether. His first microphone was made in 1878 and consisted of pieces of firewood, a match box, some sealing wax and his wife's work basket. Hughes spent 5 cents in its production.

Discovered by Chance in Church Archives.

Just by chance what is said to be the first Dutch Bible ever printed has been found in the archives of the Delft branch of the Dutch Bible society. It was published at Delft in 1477 by Jacob Jacobszoon and Maurice Yemmenszoon, who came from Mirdelburg. The volume will be shown at a Bible exhibition to be held at Delft soon. The printer, according to the history of the book was compelled to flee during an interlude in producing the book.

The Dutch Bible society has many valuable Bibles in its collection and the Holy Scriptures are reported here as a sort of presidential charter from the days of the great struggle for freedom by the 80 years' war of Spanish domination of the seventeenth century is evident even in one of the foundations of the Dutch language. The society is just in Italia it translated in a form intelligible to the present generation.

The society itself is more than an institution for the spread of religion. It was founded in 1814, some ten years after the separation of the English Bible society, in commemoration of Halfweeks liberation from the French in 1813. The Dutch people may be getting less emotional as they are less religious, and the Dutch Bible society, which has 200 branches in Holland alone and numerous representatives in the overseas port of the kingdom, is still truly a national institution. It does much international work, too, distributing thousands of Bibles, printed in all sizes and published in 14 European and some 20 Indian languages, for the use of scholars who are sent by the society to live among the natives and study their tongues. There are some 40 native peoples under the rule of Queen Wilhelmina.

The society's Scriptures are very similar to those of the American Bible society. It often sells books at a loss or gives them away to hospitals, hotels, ships, seamen's homes and charitable institutions.

It spreads leaflets to which attention is called 20 special tests for special cases. It has caused the scriptures to be printed in Braille for the blind and in four millimeter type for the near-sighted.

"I was very much impressed by the manner with which the American society's correspondence are sending their meetings amid the buzzing crowds of New York in such central places as Wall street, having their Fifties at the hosts of Mammon himself," said J. F. Westerman, the Dutch society's representative here. "But the Dutch society also is reaching all social classes. Its work, however, is strictly confined to making Book of Books better known. It does not occupy itself with exegesis and there is no controversial matter in the task of its board, in which various denominations are represented. From an adherent of the old Catholic church, Professor van den Berg, has a seat on the executive board."

The interest of the Dutch people in the society's work might be inferred, still with about 24,000 members it is fighting its way bravely.—Boston age.

A Rembrandt Discovered

Glasgow, Scotland—Has a sensation to the report, that the famous picture, "The Man in Armour," by Rembrandt, was found in possession of the bailiffs—of a second action, which followed by an exhibition to have made certain additions to the picture gone into 100 years ago. At present the painting is in Dalford being "cooked ready" for certain cracks, which may appeared in the canvas, and the cost will more than expenses to the Artistic committee of Glasgow can obtain that around the figure and breast of the suit of a second are in the value of "The Man in Armour" is estimated at over $500,000. It was sure to the possession of Sir James Reynolds.

Rapid Printing of Braille

Reading matter for the blind has not been generally available for the reason that under the older system of Braille printing it was necessary to make every dot by hand, so that reading matter for the blind was not only scarce but often prohibitive in price. A great advance in this matter is in a recently invented rotary press for the printing of Braille type which has been installed in the National Institute for the Blind in London. Sixteen thousand copies of Braille reading material are being turned out in an hour, a speed five times greater than was ever before been possible.

Named After Famous Spa

Marienbrun originally came into use in the seventeenth century in the consequences of the Epsom spa in England, which became famous as a watering place, and finally, about 1680, wrote Chevalier H. Lister in "Four Thousand Years of Pharmacy." Later in the same century the Friedrich Hoffman raised the waters of one brunette spring in Germany to notable importance, analyzed and on the terms Lippich salt and Hoffman salt was used to designate this same substance, long before its composition had been established.

For wise MOTHERS
Doctors these winter days, wise mothers strengthen their children with Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil. It contains Vitamin A or sunshine. This helps build up acute resistance against colds and against other common childhood ailments. Then there is a trace of the "sunshine vitamin" (D) which helps in the process of forming bones and teeth—a matter so important in growing children. Pleasant to take. Easy for children to take. BANKERS DEVELOP NEW FINANCE AID

President of American Bankers Association Describes Plan and Services of National Credit Corporation

NEW YORK—The National Credit Corporation, a newly formed cooperative institution, to the mutual workedout to banking to put into practical effect the central points in President Hoover's plan for removing the economical and financial anxieties of the nation as pointed to an statement to the nation of Further T. Harry J. Haas, president of the American Bankers Association, stated in a recent interview.

The corporation is strictly temporary in character in that to assist the entire banking system and increase the effectiveness of the financial services of banks to their communities in every district as well as the cities. The plan will maintain the banking resources of the country as expanded by creating a national institution whose funds will be used when and exactly to banks which have assets in their portfolios that are temporarily sound but are not available for prompt or future current loans.

To Handle Eligible

There is no limit to the United States but will benefit to very powerful ways from the creation of the corporation of this formidable kind of institution, which may be regarded as one of the most constructive steps that have been taken toward revival of sound business activity," Mr. Haas declared, adding:

"The National Credit Corporation represents an instrumentality that should serve far-reaching effect in restoring the confidence of the public. The plan not only has been formulated by the country's leading banking authorities, but also will be supported financially as well as managed by banks representing every state given their time and strength, in this order taking as a real public service.

"The American Bankers Association convention was in session at the time the plan was proposed and unanimously endorsed it in principle. I have examined the question thoroughly in the working plans as developed by the foremost leaders of many of the nation's leading financial institutions and have come to put it into practical operation, as singles-minding services of the national welfare, and I am able to say without reservation that the National Credit Corporation as set up by these institutions can be successful and efficient means for carrying out President Hoover's proposal."

HARD TIMES RENEW BANKER'S OPTIMISM

Former Bankers' Chief Finds Much in Past Year to Inspire Confidence in Financial Reliability

ROMB C. STEPHENSON, retiring President of the American Bankers Association, declared in an address on the expiration of his term of office that, in traversing these months, the banks from one end of the country to the other during the past year, he had "come out of it with a renewed faith in the strength of our banking structure and our banking situation and a renewed faith particularly in the sporting and courage of the men in the banks that have existed them to the nation, created over difficulties as we never have had to face before, or to grapple with forbidden misfortunes that were beyond human power to prevent."

When he reflected, he said, that the entire banking system of the country has been brought to the verge of ruin under the difficulties that have swept over not only the nation but the entire world, and that the results of events of this kind exist with surprising rapidness quite the stability of our banks, and yet how few have succumbed, we may well renew our confidence in the minds of America, when we think that of few many of our bankers have stood up under the stress and storms of these times and how relatively few of them have been forced wanting in the terms of crises that have assisted them, we may well feel a sincere pride in our fellow bankers." He added:

"So I come out of this year of somber experience not as a pessimist, but as an optimist—as one with a renewed faith and confidence in the spirit of his fellow men under overwhelming difficulties and particularly do I come out of this year as a banker who is proud of his fellow bankers for the undaunted way in which they have met their part of the great test through which the times have put the nation. I believe that this has brought new honor to our banking traditions and our banking principles and has won for the banker new title to the faith and trust of all classes of his fellow citizens."

Wise Spending

Careful and wise spending will help solve our economic problems and will be of untold benefit to the farmer. Our troubles are not caused by the spending of money, but rather by the way it is spent unwisely.

Napoleon No Scholar

Napoleon did not distinguish himself in school. As one writer puts it: Napoleon's scholastic career was not brilliant and he received his commission in the artillery in 1785 without having given evidence of any marked ability, except, perhaps, that of holding his own counsel and of carrying through to the end any exercise adopted. Those traits, which afterward made him feared equally in the council chamber and on the battle field, he inherited from his mother.

MAY USE RADIO TO FIGHT FOREST FIRES

The radio as a means of reporting forest fires and of directing fire fighting operations may eventually come into general use in Michigan if experiments to be carried on by the Division of Field Administration of the Department of Conservation prove the system to be practicable.

Plans are being outlined to conduct experiments with portable radio sets during at the Forest Fire Experiment Station near Roscommon.

If the use of radio proves successful it will probably mean a considerable change in the Michigan forest fire suppression system. It would be used chiefly for communication between towers or headquarters and a field force actually working on forest fires.

While all of the 150 towers within the fire zone of the state have regular telephone communication with the nearest district fire headquarters, it frequently happens that the telephone lines become crossed by trees or broken by falling trees and branches.

If the radio should prove practicable under field conditions it would mean that crews would be notified of fires as soon as the district headquarters. Keymen equipped with ordinary radio receiving sets would be notified of the location of fires within a few minutes of the time they were sighted by the towerman and orders could be transmitted without delay from the district headquarters where the district office is on duty and where all the mobile fire fighting equipment is stored.

It was planned to have a rabbit supper but at the present time there is no assurance about the rabbit part of it but there will be a supper of some sort the members can rest assured.

FARMERS TO PETITION REDUCTION IN TAXES

Farmers interested in tax reduction are signing a petition, addressed to the governor and members of the state legislature, wherein they ask the state treasurer be authorized whereby they will be relieved of some part of what, and justly so, they hold as an unjust and excessive burden on farm properties.

Farmers are convinced that in proportion to actual cash values they are carrying and unjust proportion of the public burden; that a survey of actual conditions will prove their contention, therefore the present petitions. Parties interested should see or communicate Niggren at the Charlevoix Cooperative Association office and subscribe their names to the petition and otherwise endorse the movement.

DID YOU EVER STOP TO THINK?
By Edson R. Waite

THAT in the minds of the public, advertising has a decidedly distinctive place. It has been put there by the facts, as inherited from his mother.

definite policy of persistent advertising in advertising only the best in quality.

Well advertised products, on account of their high quality and the best service they give, have proven themselves the best time and time again.

It is a well known fact that persistent advertisers never substitute for quality. Substitutes for quality never entirely.

Discriminating buyers demand products that are advertised, for their quality is guaranteed and they always give complete satisfaction.

Of the many methods of advertising created, none has met with such cordial appreciation as advertising through the printed page.

Advertising through the printed page meets every requirement of every line of business. It surpasses in economy and brings better results than any other known method of advertising.

Good advertising not only brings business but builds prestige. Wide-awake business concerns profit by its service.

More and better advertising creates a desire on the part of its readers to possess. Persistent advertising means more sales and more sales mean more profits.

The world knows that persistent advertisers always keep step with progress.

A fight fall of snow Thursday night, covering the ground to a depth of four or five inches, was welcomed by a large part of Charlevoix citizens and a delight to the kiddies and young people generally.

There has been considerable interest evidenced in this program and it is to be hoped the public will respond in order to make those classes worth while.

A fine social event was the recent meeting of the Clubwomen of the Methodist Church, when thirty-three of them celebrated the holiday spirit at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Milton Bloch. After devotions by Mrs. W. W. Hurd, and a programme of dramatic readings by Mrs. Harrison Trimble and Mrs. Frank Bird, the ladies exchanged gifts, from a beautifully decorated tree provided by the hostess, after which she served delicious refreshments.

Mrs. N. H. Bruderick, who spent the holiday season with her parents, Mr. and Mrs F. S. Myers, returned to her home, Detroit, last Monday.

Illness such as confined him to his home presented Rev. E. S. Doan from conducting the usual service at the Episcopal Church last Sunday.

Twenty-nine young fellows sat down to a sumptuous six o'clock dinner at the Methodist Church. They represented the young Men's Group of the High School Department of the Sunday School. The work of Mrs. Wm. Mr. Charles Lickliter and sons Bob and Ray went to Chicago a few days ago, where they will continue their work with the Robins Incorporated for the coming three months at least. Mrs. Linklater in the meantime will look after the local business of the company.

George Driggett returned to Milwaukee Saturday following a visit with his parents Mr. and Mrs. William F. Driggett, over the holiday season.

The Ironton Congregational church held its annual meeting last Friday January 1st. A good attendance was present. The reports revealed a very prosperous condition. A substantial gain in membership was reported also all bills are paid and a nice nest balance in the treasury to face the new years. Several important improvements were made during the year. The attendance is splendid and increasing. A good feeling of fellowship exists and cooperation seems to be the middle name. One will have to look far to find a more substantial rural church. One that attracts the whole community.

The pastor's family drove to Olivet Michigan Saturday to take his daughter Helen and Miss Lola Fessenden back to their college work. Hugh Kinsman of Kalamazoo to take a lesson on his clarinet and visit his former music teacher, Mr. George Amon, director of music, band and orchestra, at the Western State Teachers College. The total trip for the day was 650 miles. That might not be a record but the Parker family had enough ride for one day. And if riding is a healthy occupation each member should be a good specimen of health for some time to come.

The annual meeting of the church will be held January 12 at the church. The business session will be preceded by a cooperative supper.

The pastor spoke before the Boyne City high school Tuesday afternoon. He used for his subject "How One Minister Uses His Spare Time. One thing that interested all was the explaining how Gold Leaf is made and used.

The members of the Junior church are attempting to build up the department. Each member is furnished with a single copy of a New Testament book and as the books are read they become the possession of the reader and another book is given him. If the complete New Testament is read the reader will have a complete set of New Testament books. The Junior church is a great success. Next Sunday Martha Craig will lead the service. A feature of the service last Sunday was the celebration of the Lord's Supper. No adult church member ever entered that service more seriously.

Invitations to impromptu parties, gotten up "on the spur of the moment," are almost always extended by telephone. Informal bridge games . . . luncheons . . . shopping trips . . . theater parties . . . scores of such events are arranged by telephone.

The telephone in your home is a great social asset. And in case of fire, sickness or other emergency, telephone service is priceless.

NIGHT SCHOOL STARTS FEB. 1

ENROLLMENT SCHEDULED TO BEGIN IMMEDIATELY

Plans for the projected adult evening classes to be held during the month of February are practically finished and the actual completion of the project depends now upon the enrollment in the courses by the residents of Charlevoix and vicinity. No subject will be offered unless at least 12 adults enroll. Classes will meet from 7:30 to 8:30 and from 8:40 to 9:30 on Monday and Tuesday evenings of the first three weeks in February. Care has been exercised in the formation of the schedule to present subjects that will be of interest to local people generally. Enrollment blanks will be sent to all parents who have children in school and others interested may secure blanks upon request of any teacher or at the Fessenden Drug Store.

It will be noted that a class in beginning reading and writing is included in the offerings. This class will be given without regard to the size of the enrollment. If there are one or two adults in Charlevoix who have not had the opportunity of school during their youth who would like instruction in these basic subjects the course will be offered.

Teachers from the local public schools will be in charge of the classes and it is hoped that initial enrollment—which should be made immediately—will warrant the actual presentation of a large percentage of the subjects which the school is prepared to give.

Enrollment will determine how many of the following classes will be held:

Household Management and Family Budgeting.
Modern Social Problems.
Science (an exploration of the part played by science in modern life).
Problems in American Government.
Community Chorus.
Modern Literature (Drama, Poetry, Short Story Growth).
Art and Interior Decoration.
Wood Working and Wood Finishing.
Problems of Modern Europe and the Orient.
Child Care and Problems of the Growing Child.
Elementary Psychology.
Music History and Appreciation.
Elementary Reading and Writing.

WAREHOUSE FOR STATE EQUIPMENT AT ROSCOMMON

The first unit of a central warehouse which will be used for the storage of emergency supplies for the department of conservation, is now under construction at Roscommon, the Division of Field Administration of the Department of Conservation has announced.

A similar building will be erected at Marquette next year for upper peninsula use, it is said.

The building at the Experiment Station, a frame structure 28x52 feet in size, is completed equipped as a garage and repair shop to repair and rebuild trucks, tractors, motor pumpers and other equipment used in forest fire service. It is expected that the shop will save considerable money stored in fire headquarters annually.

It is planned to build the second unit of this central warehouse during 1932.

The Central warehouse in the upper peninsula will be identical with the one at the Experiment Station. It will adjoin the forest fire headquarters building just out of Marquette.

I. O. O. F. COUNTY ASS'N TO HOLD ANNUAL MEET

Saturday night, January 16th, a large number of I. O. O. F. County Association will hold their annual meeting at Horton's Bay.

In this association four I. O. O. F. organizations are interested, Boyne City, East Jordan, Charlevoix and Horton Bay, all of which will be well represented. It is probable that exemplification of some degree work will be conducted at this meeting.

Elaborate preparations are under way for serving a chicken dinner to the multitude gathered for the special occasion.

School News

Last Thursday, January 7, the Hi Y Club held a meeting to discuss a new leader and to consider the advisability of selling new members to the group at once. There are now six members, with Hugh Parker, President; Delores Bird, Vice President and David Dirk Secretary and Treasurer. Last year Mr. Otterbein was leader. The new leader for this year has not been decided upon. The meeting was held in the Domestic Science Room and after the official business was disposed of, the professional chefs, Devere Bird and Hugh Parker, served the other four members with toast and hot chocolate.

Hot school vocal has decided that we shall not have a school skating rink this year. It is a matter of common knowledge that winter is late in coming it is not thought advisable to spend the necessary time and money to prepare a rink that would only last for a short time at the most.

Each Thursday from now on, Miss Atkinson will conduct a period of singing in the assembly from 8:30 until 8:45.

Wednesday afternoon Miss Atkinson will present a musical program to the assembly during the 1st hour in the afternoon.

The Kalamazoo College Glee Club will be with us again this year. Some time in the spring. There has been no definite date decided upon.

Bessie and Dirk Straw have returned from Florida and are again in school with us.

Bertha Pierce is absent from school because of the illness of her mother who lives in Norwood. We hope she will soon be back with us.

The game at Boyne City last Friday night was a fast, clean and a very close game all the way through. Howard Davenport was high point man for Charlevoix of the night, during the game, the score was tie. Flint we would make a basket and they would. Charlevoix was ahead within the last few minutes of the game ends the score was tie, twelve and twelve but Boyne City made a basket making the score fourteen to twelve favor of Boyne City.

Miss Freda McMillan was a recent visitor in Miss Milner's eighth grade English class. Miss McMillan entertained the class by reading several very interesting short stories.

Commercial Department

Dorothy Griffith and Ilan Geniet were the guests of the Club last night. The remaining students in the class are striving all the harder hoping they might win one of these awards next month.

Junior High News

Basketball has started in the first game of the season by defeating Boyne City twelve to six. At the end of the first half the score stood six to nothing in Charlevoix's favor. A desperate rally on the part of the Boyne City team in the last half limited the local Jr. High to but two points while running up six.

The superior work, speed and accuracy of Bob Pearl's scoring eye, made the game in favor of Charlevoix most of the time as Bob dropped in ten out of the scoring points. McGarry, Serine, Hansen and LaBlanc brought the ball into scoring territory many times.

Student Council

The regular weekly meeting Tuesday, was an interesting one because the discussion centered around the question of the best way to raise funds by means of promoting Character Education in the Junior High.

The Student Council, Bob Emery, June Davy, and Charles Scott, were appointed to investigate the proposition. He will make a report to the council. Through information from the superintendent, Mr. Bush, they learned that this system, which was $8.00, was bought at first by the school, next year at the price of $1.50 another set could be bought. After conversing with the three secretary's representatives the three grades, the council was pleased to learn that by using the cartoon was concerned because of the lack of money throughout the grades.

Eighth Grade Party

At seven o'clock Saturday evening members of the 8th grade assembled at the gym for an evening of fun and refreshments.

Relay basketball races in which a variety of combinations played each other often revealed that the girls were quite as accurate in shooting baskets as some of the boys.

Another meeting of the three lodges is scheduled for the near future, this according to present plans, to be held in Charlevoix in about two weeks.

The first game of the series of eight games in the schedule played one week earlier, was won by the F. & A. M. teams, with a lead of 174. Monday night's play reduces the F. & A. M. to a lead of 122 points.

No contest is scheduled for Monday night, January 18th, the third Monday of the month. However the play will be resumed and the third game of the series played at 1. O. O. F. hall on the evening of January 25th.

BAD ACCIDENT AT AIRPORT

CAPT. JOSEPH VALIER STRUCK BY PROPELLER BLADE

Left Arm So Badly Mangled Amputation Performed At The Local Hospital

A most painful, serious and distressing accident was the lot of Capt. Joseph Valier, who was a passenger on the airplane last Sunday afternoon, when the ship made its return trip from St. James, the accident taking place immediately following the landing of the plane at the local airport, when Mr. Valier, upon leaving the ship stepped back toward the rapidly revolving propeller and was struck on the left arm and side by one of the propeller blades.

Mr. Valier was taken to the local hospital for examination and treatment. Examination by medical attendants revealed a badly crushed left arm and so terribly crushed and mangled that amputation was necessary. Monday afternoon surgeons removed the injured member, since which time Mr. Valier has been as comfortable as could be expected when the seriousness of the accident is taken under consideration.

Mr. Valier is a resident of St. Ignace. He had been visiting relatives and friends at St. James for some days and was returning to his home via the air route and Charlevoix when he met with his misfortune.

W. C. T. U. GIVEN TALK BY PROBATE JUDGE

Probate Judge E. A. Ruegsegger in a talk given before the Woman's Christian Temperance Union last Friday, expressed the opinion that there are too many "don't laws" on our statute books, in fact so many that we break some of them unconsciously.

The fact that children see their parents intentionally breaking laws that they personally do not like, together with the trend of the past few years for parents to leave their children to their own device while they have a good time themselves are having a decidedly bad effect on the younger generation.

Probably no law can be perfectly enforced but they can be obeyed and law observance is the way out of our present difficulties.

There was a general discussion of the need of enlisting parents and children in a determined obedience to law.

The meeting was held at the home of Mrs. T. W. Milner following a 1 o'clock cooperative luncheon and was well attended. Mrs. Rauch had charge of the devotionals. Several games were presented for members' skip and the work of the year was inaugurated in a promising manner.

Mrs. H. S. Harsha went to Detroit Friday where she will spend several weeks with her daughter, Mrs. Slaughter and family. She was accompanied on the trip to Detroit by her son-in-law, E. A. Young and her grandson Dred Young, who returned home Sunday.

MOTOR VEHICLE WEIGHT TAX RECEIPTS FOR 1931

Total motor vehicle weight taxes for 1931 were $20,188,003.17 according to records of the department of state, which show that there were 1,079,532 passenger cars in the state, 145,332 commercial vehicles, 3,229 motorcycles, 62,012 trailers and 1,718 dealers' licenses.

Wayne county with 400,171 pleasure cars, about 40 per cent of the total in the state, paid the largest amount in taxes with $7,985,248. Kent county with 55,240 pleasure cars, paid $1,076,553 in taxes, the only other county in which the collections were over $1,000,000 being its country registered 243 pleasure automobiles paid $5,993, the smallest amount received from any county.

Charlevoix County registered 2,491 cars paying $45,735. Antrim Co. 1,987 cars, $32,769. Cheboygan, 2,064 cars, $37,123; Emmet, 3,637 cars $64,219; Grand Traverse, 4,736 cars, $85,754 and Kalkaska Co., 768 cars, $12,181.

CELEBRATE THEIR 25TH ANNIVERSARY

MR. AND MRS. JOSEPH HOWARD ENTERTAIN SIXTEEN

Twenty-five years ago, December 8th, 1907, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Howard were united in marriage and the adventure came to the conclusion of a perfect twenty-five years of wedded bliss. Mr. and Mrs. Howard received several splendid silver tokens, remembrances from their guests at the function as well as some splendid pieces from friends residing at distant points as evidence of the esteem in which they are held universally.

Taken all in all it was a delightful function and will long remain in the memory of everyone participating in the event.

Tally cards for the bridge game were unique, novel and artistic in four designs, the first picturing a serenading scene; the second an elopement; the third the wedding and the fourth the honeymoon. Joe says "all realistic except the elopement." To that he pleads "Not guilty."

AMERICAN LEGION TREASURE HUNT

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 27, THE DATE SET FOR AFFAIR

Wednesday, January 27, 1932, has been fixed as the date of the Legion's Treasure Hunt, which was announced in last week's issue of the Sentinel. It has been decided to use fifty per cent of the proceeds of the sale of tickets for the treasure itself. The value of the "hunt" and the hour and place of meeting will be published in next week's paper.

Tuesday evening was the Legion's social meeting night and an interesting program was staged by Comrades Robert Bridge and Ralph Price, who performed very pleasingly upon the violin and mandolin respectively. Mr. Price's ballad, entitled "On The Dear Old Farm" met with especially enthusiastic reception and the boys would be interested to hear the remainder of the thirty-seven verses at any time.

On the same evening, at Manistee, occurred a get-together meeting of the members of the Ninth District, American Legion of Michigan, with invited guests from the Lower Eleventh District, including Petoskey and Charlevoix. This was in celebration of Manistee post's successful membership drive. Lee C. Allard, commander of the local post, was a guest at this meeting and reports that it was a good one.

The bugle and drum corps of Leslie T. Shapton Post are practicing earnestly, one a week (usually on Monday evenings), with John Tar Wee, band leader, as instructor and Herbert Wakefield as drill master. The corps needs buglers and will purchase instruments for the use of any who want to join this section of the corps and will agree to practice faithfully.

As soon as the recruits are lined up, a beginner's class will be started under Mr. Tar Wee's instruction and the students worked into the corps practice as they become proficient.

It is the desire of the members to have the bugle and rum corps ready to participate in the parade at Kalamazoo during the 1932 state convention of the Legion there on Labor Day. This is especially important in view of the fact that we are bidding for the 1933 state convention at Charlevoix and want to make a good showing at Kalamazoo where the matter will be decided. The corps also needs uniforms and must raise money in some way to provide for them.

SPORTSMEN'S CLUB MEET IN K. P. HALL MONDAY EVE.

What turned out to be a very interesting session of the Charlevoix Sportsmen's Club was held Monday evening in the K. P. hall and the business session of the club was an enjoyable feed for those in attendance.

Election of officers was held with the following results: President, Leo See, Vice President Harold Hallett, secretary, Clarence Wood; treasurer, Harry Gregory and as directors, A. L. Fitch, Oscar Nelson, and C. Y. Marshall.

CITY TREASURER'S REPORT IS VERY FAVORABLE

According to City Treasurer Robert S. Nye, taxpayers in Charlevoix are taking up their tax receipts fully as well this year as in the same period for the 1930 tax.

The 1931 roll foots, approximately $1,250,000 of this amount a total of $70,000 had been received by the City Treasurer up to January 8th, making for an exceptionally good showing under present financial conditions, and probably for a record in tax payments in this region.

Monday evening the city council extended the date for the collection of the four per cent penalty on taxes until February 29, 1932.

OUR INFERIORITY COMPLEX

In screaming on his excursions in America, following a lecture tour over the country, Sir E. Denison Ross, an Orientalist and director of the London School of Oriental Studies, said in New York the other day:

"One of the things the matter in America is peculiar. He has everything to learn and very little to teach to most of them with whom he comes in contact—for these know England and Europe just as well as he does. Nevertheless, he is profited as if he came from some wonderful fairyland, inconceivable to mind. Now, why do you give us such a wonderful welcome?

"I am inclined to think the reason is to be found in just quite disingenuous nero worship. However unwittingly or modest we may be, you treat us all as if we were novelbodies."

Perhaps a part of the enthusiasm with which European visitors are acclaimed is due to our inherent "hero worship," as Sir Denison puts it, and at least a part of it is due to American hospitality and the desire to learn.

But the most remarkable paragraph in the British lecturer's statement is the following:

"I have traveled much and lived longyears away from my native land, but only here have I found a people accepting to be adversely criticized. I have sometimes felt that the fact that I found so little to criticize has been a disappointment to my American friends. Personally, I find myself too busy bestowing praise on the many things I admire. I often wonder why so few people who can afford to travel come to America."

More than one foreign visitor coming to our shores has remarked on the attitude which many Americans assume of expecting and accepting criticism of all things American. Part of this expectancy may be due to the fact that it is realized most of the lecturers who come to America come to criticize, and to complain because we do not adopt European customs and traditions, and play Santa Claus to the world as well. And more of it may be due to the fact that our own internationalists have through their propaganda and publicity given us an inferiority complex so far as our relations with Europe are concerned. They have so consistently apologized for everything American, from George Washington's farewell address down to the refusal of Congress to cancel all war debts, and have so consistently lauded all things European, that a great many people who have never been to Europe have caught the inferiority complex from their pro-European American neighbors.

And it is further true, of course, that a great many of the Americans who flock to Europe by European visitors are internationalists and European worshippers in their own right, which may somewhat color the American picture as the European visitor sees it. There are still in the United States a great many people who have faith in American traditions and in American civilization They may not be as noisy as the internationalists but they are here in great numbers just the same.

All Americans of course want to give distinguished European visitors a cordial welcome and a respectful hearing. But to humbly await and seek with adverse criticism, whether it is deserved or not, persons in neither to respect ourselves nor to earn respect from our visitors.

TARIFF BALLYHOO

The low tariff advocates in Congress are not entirely together on what they want to do with protection in the present session of Congress. Some of them say that the House will pass a new tariff bill but that no attempt will be made to lower all the rates. Others declare that it would be inadvisable to pass a tariff bill with lower schedules, because it would be vetoed anyhow; so, they ask, why go to all the trouble?

The real fact is that after all their ballyhoo about the tariff the free traders in Congress know that the people still want protection because they see that it is vital to American well being. Lowering the rates on manufactured products would destroy these industries in their present weakened condition and certainly would not help the farmers by taking away the purchasing power of the American worker, which, depleted though it is, is far superior to anything in Europe. And certainly the free traders will not attempt to lower schedules on farm products. To do so would be to commit political suicide.

The fact is that during the present session of Congress there will be greater effort for additional protection than there will be for reduced schedules. The oil interests and the copper interests of the West are going to ask for protection, something which they are entitled to if they want it America is the greatest copper producing country in the world, and while our mines are litle copper can be produced by slave labor in Africa at a cost much below anything possible here. At the same time cheap labor in South America and forced labor in Russia have disrupted the world's oil market and petroleum products are being shipped into America from abroad, displacing the product of American wells which now produce a great deal more oil than they can sell.

The free traders in Congress will now have a chance to make good their bluff about lowering tariff rates But they won't do it. There is a greater probability of additional protection being enacted into law.

CORPORATIONS CANNOT PAY TAXES!

In spite of all the political bunk to the contrary, the giant corporations do not, in the exact sense, pay taxes. They cannot.

This is unfortunate but it is true. The people pay the taxes—whether they be millionaires or day laborers, and there are a good many more day laborers than millionaires, even in boom times. They pay taxes when they write a check for the meat, electric or grocery bill, when they purchase a home and lot or a package of playing cards, when they eat a meal or go to a movie, when they smoke a cigarette or take a spin in the car.

Our gigantic corporations have no magical means of producing money from the air. They can get it only from the people to whom they sell their commodities or services. All costs necessary to the running of a business, whether they be taxes, labor or purchases of supplies, must be passed along to the customer. And the customer, in the aggregate, is all of us.

Consequently, next time you hear political demands for taking the rich to help the poor, dismiss them for what they are usually worth—nothing. It would be pleasant if it were possible, but the inexorable laws of barter rule otherwise—and they are laws that politics can't repeal.

WHERE THE TAX LOAD LEADS

"What this country is headed for, if our politicians keep on looking at the citizen as a tax well to be pumped for this or that political purpose, is billboarded for us in the British Empire," says the San Francisco Chronicle, December 2, 1931.

"The present difference between American and British taxes is due only to the fact that the British started their tax-spending orgy first. We will catch up fast enough if our politicians have their way. Judging from the schemes proposed . . . Congress is champing to put more horsepower at work on the tax well."

The Chronicle then shows that the British income tax rate starts at 10 per cent on the first $850 of taxable income and immediately jumps to 25 per cent on the balance of income. In addition to these there are various taxes on commodities, many kinds of regular and special taxes on real property and heavy surtaxes on incomes above $6,800 a year. Concluding, the Chronicle says:

"Great Britain has come to this punishing tax situation by a program of government spending, spending, spending, without considering ability of the nation to pay, leaving out the cost of war, most of the increase has not been due to need but to the desire of politicians to taffy this or that group of followers. We have the same kind of politicians in this country who will do the same thing and bring the United States to the same sorry pass, unless the people call a halt."

NO SMOKERS WANTED!

Want ads for farm workers are frequently worded like this: "Wanted—Man for general farm work. Smokers need not apply."

The reason for this, of course, is the frequency of farm fires and the fact that once started, they are usually more destructive than fires in urban areas where buildings are of safer construction and where fire fighting facilities are more highly developed and are nearer at hand.

The various hazards on the farm are manifold. Spontaneous ignition of hay and grain; storing autos and tractors in barns where hay is kept; burning stubble fields and burning rubbish in the open; storage of gasoline in unsafe containers; heating and lighting with inflammable liquids; defective electric wiring; carelessness with matches and smoking; lightning —each of these has been responsible for the destruction of millions of dollars worth of farm property and thousands of lives.

It is apparent that a little care and expense will go a long way toward reducing such hazards to a minimum. In cases where the farmer himself is uncertain what course to take, he may easily obtain information from near-by fire departments or from the various organizations which are working to eliminate fire. It is all very well to seek workers who do not smoke—but nothing save unceasing vigilance and a knowledge of fire hazards and how to conquer them, can achieve a real and permanent reduction in farm fire losses.

A CENTURY AGO

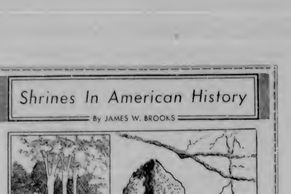
A little more than a century ago, in 1913, a blacksmith in London laboriously joined old gun barrels together—to make the first gas pipeline. Now the gas pipelines in this country alone would reach many times around the world, and gas is an indispensable servant of home and of industry.

The growth of this industry, in less than two lifetimes, is a splendid testimonial to the power and far-sightedness of individual initiative and enterprise.

One example of modern American financial statesmanship is found in the fact that we tax the railroads to build cement highways which the trucks may use free to put the railroads out of business.

Shrines In American History

By JAMES W. BROOKS



COLONIAL LANDMARKS AT JAMESTOWN, VIRGINIA

And he removed from thence and digged another well." This quotation from Genesis 24 22 aptly applies to this old well from which the new arrivals in America drew their supply of pure water. Nearby are the ruins of the old church, its broken tower marking the way to fraggic scenes in Colonial history. Both are now in the keeping of the Association for the Preservation of Virginia Antiquities.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

One of the most significant changes in American public opinion during the past decade has been particularly manifest of late, and that is the growing determination of the people of the United States to have as little as possible to do with Europe in the future until Europe sets its own house in order. The era of international ism in American politics is passing. The era of national ism is coming. Men of both political parties express the same feeling and the same determination. Returning from visiting their constituents, Congressmen are startled the unanimity with the understanding that there was to be no cancellation and no reduction in the Lausanne debt. Representative Bacharach, publican like Senator Reed of Pennsylvania and representative Democrats like Bernard Baruch came out against debt cancellation.

And indeed why should not Americans logically take the stand which they are assuming. For again the fact has been recognized that it is impossible to aid any individual permanently unless he tries to help himself. The same thing is true of nations. Instead of pulling together with some sane and constructive program to eliminate economic barriers and political friction which might lead to wars instead of conceding and conciliating in the interests of peace and economic stability, the nations of Europe seem figuratively still willing and ready to fly at one another's throats The only point on which they seem to be agreed is that they would like to get something further out of Uncle Sam if they can wheedle or bully or threaten it out of him in any way. There seems to be no disposition on the part of European statesmen to be willing to sit down together calmly and peacefully and looking the facts in the face, seeking to secure some fair and equitable economic adjustment of Europe's problems. The old spirit of 1914 still dominates. Each seeks to get the advantage of the other. Why then can they expect Uncle Sam to come to the rescue or to attempt to ease their burdens further? Time and again we have tried it without avail. If Europe will only try to do something for itself and devote some effort to working out a constructive program for its own salvation, then Uncle Sam would be more apt to lend a willing ear. But this seems impossible to accomplish Europe apparently has learned nothing from the World War or from the hectic flowing years which have followed the armistice.

But the American people have learned something They have learned the utter hollowness of the cries for help itself The majority American opinion was well summed up the other day by Senator Borah, when he said:

"For 12 years we have been assured recovery, all based upon some temporary expediency with reference to reparations. But no recovery has put in appearance.

"If Europe cannot see her way clear to end reparations and drastically cut armaments, the United States had better come out of Europe financially and stay out.

"It will cost us something to come out, but it will bankrupt us to stay in. Since 1915, in one way and another, we have put close to $45,000,000,000 in Europe. It has not ended the economic crisis in Europe and it has brought an economic crisis to the United States.

"There is a limit to the help which may be extended to others when they pursue policies and hold programs which make help vain and ineffectual."

EDITORIAL COMMENT

OUR LOANS TO EUROPE

By George B. Lockwood

The roots of our present trouble in this country are in the financial and economic involvements of United States with Europe, for some of which the World War was an excuse and not a reason. We have, as a nation, been trading assets for intuitive to the profit of a very few American units who have been compelled to awaken from the great delusion that the resources of this country are inexhaustible, and its ability to sacrifice its own to foreign interests is illimitable. We have been chloroformed by sentimental and financial internationalists into believing that we could go on forever being the world's good thing, without finally reaching the cold gray dawn of pay-day. With an army of 6,000,000 unemployed, and with a deficit in national revenues of two billion dollars because American income has so dropped that it cannot begin under our present tax rates to pay the cost of government, we ought to begin to get out of this ordeal at least the benefit of a disillusioning experience.

Some facts of interest came out in the debate on the moratorium in the Senate last week. We loaned France $4,026,000,000 during and after the world war. Of this amount, $1,655,000,000 was loaned after the war and $400,000,000 of it was for materials we had in France at the end of the war, to the value of two billion dollars, which France sold at a large profit over the amount she had agreed to pay, after forbidding this country to sell the materials on the open market. Because of this transaction we might say that France paid no part of her debt to us. But the value of the Franco-American settlement at the time it was made was $1,681,000,000, approximately principal and interest of our loans after the war with France given 60 years to pay.

We loaned Belgium $417,780,000. We collected only the post-Armistice debt of $246,000,000.

We loaned Italy $2,042,000,000. Her post-Armistice debt with interest was $800,000,000. We got an agreement to pay a value of $426,000,000.

Great Britain was the only nation that came anywhere near settling her debt to the United States. We loaned England $4,600,000,000. Of this $581,000,000 was loaned after the Armistice But $1,682,000,000 of England's debt represented "exchange and cotton purchases" not for supplies we furnished England, but to stabilize sterling exchange, and enable England to make purchases from other countries at a maintained exchange rate. And with interest our post-war advances to England amounted to $600,000,000. The value of our entire debt settlement was $3,297,000,000. England did not do so badly, and she got 60 years to pay.

We took nothing by way of territory or indemnities at the peace conference. Our associates divided up land areas equal in extent to that of the entire United States. We got absolutely nothing out of the war. We made great sacrifices evidently with the purpose of putting Europe on her feet after the cataclysm of war. We have had our reward in continuous denunciation as a Shylock because we were willing to take back any of this money our people had paid. We have faced the demand that what is

Even Norwood, mind you—Norwood—is trying to do something for herself and is shaking up the matter of having a canning factory.

Col. D. C. Wickham surprised his many Charlevoix friends last Thursday by appearing to them as big as life and twice as natural. The Colonel dropped in for a brief respite, while awaiting orders for future work. He has been out several times with the "local spirits" for hunting. The Colonel was recently elected an honorary member of Charlevoix Chapter, R. A. M. Sackville, by the way, means Royal Arch Masons.

Information comes that a club house and twelve cottages will be erected on the new resort just this side of Ironton, formerly known as the Wolcott farm. The property is owned by people of Galesburg, Ill.

The local lodge of Licensed Tugmen's Association have very pleasant quarters in the Turtle building. Considerable business is transacted at the daily afternoon meetings—for it is chiefly seven up or pedro. The lodge has seventy members, and anybody is eligible who has master's pilot or engineer's papers. Capt. Pete Campbell, a cheerier of the S. S. S. is an influential member of the L. T. A., and is said to be transferring some of the onerous work of the forces to the latter. It will be investigated at the meeting of the S. S. S.

Central Lake Torchlight Willard A. Smith, the veteran editor of the Charlevoix Sentinel, made the Torch office a hurried call on Monday while on a short visit to Central Lake. Mr. Smith has been in the editorial harness in Northern Michigan about as long as any of them, having started the Sentinel 33 years ago. At the time he went to Charlevoix by stage from Traverse City and had to walk up all the hills to help out the team which was drawing a heavy load. The Sentinel has been a power in the development of Northern Michigan generally, and of Charlevoix in particular. In his mind there is no question but that Charlevoix will secure the beet sugar factory that they are now after, and his faith in his little city is unbounded.

The steamer Huckley went to Round Island Monday, returning this same evening. This is the latest the Huckley ever made the Beaver Island trip.

The steamer City of Grand Rapids will probably be seen here no more, as she goes to another route next season—probably between Traverse City and Escanaba. Capt. Wilbur has resigned the command of her.

The Charlevoix Marine Engineers' Association is a live and progressive organization. They hold weekly meetings for the study of the science of their profession, occasionally reciting the monotony by proceedings that are not exactly scientific.

We referred recently to the partiality shown by H. V. Hotchkiss for the "peerless" smoking tobacco. It recently coming to the notice of the manufacturers of "peerless" that the "Iron Duke" had smoked that tobacco for twenty-five years, they sent him a pound of it, with the compliments of the house.

Snow, snow, plenty of snow— We would propose a point this week on the snow, beautiful snow, if we did not so horribly dread the disposition of our contemporary up the river. We have been walking around the chambers of our editorial brain, a lovely sparkling poem that starts off something like this.

Save the glittering diamond flakelets,
Fall gently on the lakelets,
See the snowdrifts, piling high,
Over stumplots up to thigher,
Hear the creaking so—

But we reserve the rest of the production for future publication, after careful revision, and the addition of a few verses that are at this moment marauding in our thought-vaults. Subscribe for the Sentinel this week and encourage budding talent.

One of the happiest looking men in this village is A. B. Upright—it's a boy.

The foundation of the Arlington Hotel, at Petoskey, has been laid, and workmen are engaged in the frame.

Mr. Bartholomew is putting stone on the ground for his proposed brick building on the corner of Bridge and Main Streets.

We visited our sister village—Norwood—on Wednesday and remained over night at the Mertz mansion, spending the evening hours in social enjoyment with several friends, and Thursday morning went the rounds of inspection. Gaples and Nash have their store fully stocked and are filling up their mill yard with logs for next season's sawing. Their mill is being thoroughly overhauled, and will be in better shape than ever when completed. Everything about Norwood seems to be imbued with new life under the invigorating influences of the new firm, who are enjoying a well merited popularity among the people of that town.

The Cincinnati Commercial of November 30, announced a contract in the construction of works from a limited number of letters and according to certain rules. The word "amplitude" was given, from the letters of which, as many words as possible were to be formed, that is standard, legitimate English words with a meaning found in Webster's unabridged dictionary, without duplicating letters. A prize was offered for the best list received before Jan. 1, 1882 There were 318 competitors for the prize, representing twenty-seven states, two territories and the province of New Brunswick. A. W. Chew of Burgess, was the winner of the prize, having sent in a list of 257 correct English words coined from the word with amplitude. The prize list of words together with the award is announced in the Commercial of Jan. 4th.

BANES LETTER

Mr. Elmer Beach, after spending his holiday vacation with his parents, returned to his studies at Ann Arbor college.

The falling snow makes lumbermen and dealers in cord wood and ties, smile with pleasure and everybody's assuming a look which means business.

The Rev. James Davies celebrated New Years Day on Tuesday by entangling Mr. Carlos Himebaugh and Miss Mary Parson in the bonds of matrimony at the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. Tullock and wife of Charlevoix were present.

At the family gathering, at the residence of E. B. Marshall, twenty-eight, small and large, sat down to dinner, representing five families. In the evening the residence of Mr. H. W. Hoark, swarmed with a score or more of jolly men and women, who spent the time with music, pantomimes and charades.

So now that the Insane Asylum at Traverse City is a certainty, and that a railroad up through here is both a possibility and a probability, it is likely that Antrim City and Norwood will be putting on airs soon, and again raise the price of town lots up to ten and twenty-five dollars for choice lots. Well, "here's to your good health, and may you live long and prosper."

Advice to wives—Man is very much like an egg; keep him in hot water and he is bound to become hardened.

It is suspected by the Boston Globe that a good many fathers have acquired that information.

On Monday last, Campbell's stazes commenced making the trips through to the railroad in one day.

The Indians of the Grand Traverse Region have $87,000 worth of property and 148 houses and raised large quantities of produce this year.

As an item of information, we give a list of prices paid for logs by F. J. Meech & Co., of Norwood: Maple and basswood, $5; white ash, $8; red ash, $7; white birch, $5; red birch, $7; hemlock, 10, 12 and 14 feet, $5; 16, 18 and 20 feet, $5.50; 22 and 24 feet, $4; propeller wood, seven shillings for choppers.

A recent visit to Norwood found everything running smoothly, business lively, and everybody enjoying good health. Courtesies extended by F. J. Meech & Co., and our friend Sylvenus Spaulding and lady, will be remembered.

"The price is too great for so small a paper," is the excuse given by some people for not subscribing for their home paper. One dollar and fifty cents too much for a general knowledge of all that is going on in the country and county! Too much for five hundred columns of reading matter! The paper to paste on the walls of your log cabin is worth fifty cents, leaving but one dollar for the general information gleaned from their columns! The local information alone is worth more than the subscription price! Who denies it?

Saturday, January 23.—As will be seen by the call in another column, the time will then have arrived for the people of this county to show their loyalty to the cause of public improvement. It is expected that all the people of the northern, eastern and central portions of the county will be in Charlevoix on that day so much has been said in our columns concerning the benefits which would arise from the united effort in this direction, that but few ideas remain to be presented, and we will forbear adranging any further argument for fear of wearing out the subject. But as every man in the localities mentioned is vitally interested in it, we hope to see them all out on Saturday.

THE GROWTH OF OUR VILLAGE

Who among them who have known our village for the past six years can doubt the future growth and prosperity of Charlevoix? Six years ago what constituted the "burg" which now boasts of 450 inhabitants? The "boarding house" seemed to have been "the village", from the steps of which the limpid waters of Pine River could not be seen for the thick growth of cedar which stood between. Nothing which would entitle it to the name of "village" existed on the south side of the river. Fork and flour could be obtained at the "old store," and dry goods in limited quantities. The mail could then be brought in a good-sized overcoat pocket. The spring of 1869 the "Mammoth Store" opened. Since that time what a big change has been wrought! By the owing us he made dependent on what Germany is expected to pay the allies, although the two matters have no connection except that which has been established by our participation in conferences on reparations settlements.

Borrowing has followed borrowing until we have become deeply involved in the European "mess". Now we are told that unless we wipe out the debts, tear down our economic defenses and take upon ourselves further financial burdens, Europe is going to go on crashing, sink and take us down with her.

This pretense of European inability to pay is a fraud. Payments due the United States from Europe under the settlement are only two and a half per cent of the amount Europe pays this country per year on all accounts, these payments aggregating ten billion dollars being offset by payments we make Europe on all accounts. The continuance of debt payments agreed upon by France would cost each Frenchman $1.25 a Year. The annual burden is little greater in any case, much less in some, than this per capita burden on France. Within the last six months the United States, governmentally and through private bankers, has advanced new loans and postponed old obligations in Germany and England to the amount of a billion and a quarter, or five times as much as the annual payments due on debt account, and that payments of a quarter billion has been postponed through the moratorium. Still goes up the cry "Give or we perish." We have been doing this for a dozen years, with what result to ourselves or to Europe?

It is entirely clear at this time that European banking interests have determined to make the United States pay the German indemnities, and that this movement is powerfully supported in the United States.

FIDDLING WHILE ROME BURNS

Former Ambassador to Germany and England Alanson B. Houghton, following his visit to Paris, where he was bowled down by an audience of 8,000 Frenchmen when he attempted to make a peace speech, proposes that declarations of war hereafter be controlled by a popular referendum.

The Constitution vests the power to declare war in Congress. The Houghton scheme would require a constitutional amendment.

It is highly improbable that this government will ever fight another war except one of national defense. It is improbable that the self-styled pacifists who want to get us involved in foreign wars by undertaking to keep the peace of the world through such devices as the League of Nations, will ever put their programs over. Consequently we may anticipate that the United States will hereafter keep out of other people's fights.

But if this nation should be attacked by some other power, is it Mr. Houghton's idea that while the other nation is amassing, drilling and transporting troops and otherwise preparing for war, Americans should be holding mass meetings and torch light processions to decide whether we are going to defend ourselves? While we are engaged in carrying on that kind of a debate, the war would be over, America would be "licked" and there would be nothing left to decide.—Muncie, Ind., Press.

PARAMOUNT PRESENTS
BIG CAST OF NOTABLES AT PALACE THEATRE

Paramount has convened another one of its all-favorites' casts for "Husband's Holiday," the modern triangle-drama based on Elmer Rice's novel and play, "The Marriage Bed," which will be seen Saturday and Sunday at the Palace Theatre.

Clive Brook, whose artistry is of such a high calibre that he has never yet drawn an adverse critique from any major writer, leads the big cast as the central figure—George Boyd, a romantic-minded husband who runs away from, rather than faces the boredom of middle-class married life.

The part of Mary Boyd, his wife, is played by Vivienne Osborne, the brunette charmer who was Paul Lukas' "folk girl friend" in "The Believed Spokesman."

Charlie Ruggles, the droll comedian of "One Hour Late," who "believed Barbelor" and many other successes, is seen in a whimsical portrayal as Clyde Saunders, one of the many middlemen in "his-lives" of this play.

Juliette Compton, the sirenesque charmer of George Bancroft's "Rich Man's Folly" and Ruth Chatterton's "Unfaithful," plays the part of the romantic young business girl who turns off with Brook, repents, and later relents the repentance.

Charles Winninger, whose greatest bid to pre-talkie fame was in his role as the original Captain Andy Hawks south in Carpenter St. and surveyed line F015-13 from intersection at Bridge and Carpenter Sts. to S. W. city limits.

Be it further resolved that the said plans and specifications be and the same are hereby approved and the consent of the city (or village) is hereby given for the making of said improvement in accordance therewith.

Be it further resolved that the city (or village) improve its portion of said streets in accordance with the plans and specifications as prepared by the State Highway Department and that the city (or village) clerk be instructed to advertise for bids for such improvements, if necessary; said bids to be received at the same time and place as the bids to be received by the State Highway Department.

Be it further resolved that the Deputy Engineer of the State Highway Department having supervision of said work on behalf of the State Highway Department be and he is hereby authorized to act for and represent the city (or village) in the supervision and inspection of that portion of the improvement belonging to the city (or village) and that the State Highway Department be reimbursed out of the city (or village) treasury, in full ordered by the State Highway Department, for the actual cost of such supervision and inspection, said actual cost to be determined when the work is completed and to be, the same proportion to the total cost of supervision and inspection as the cost of the city (or village) portion of the work bears to the total cost of the work.

Be it further resolved that a copy of the final estimate to the contractor for the city (or village) portion of the work be sent to the State Highway Department for the purpose of a record.

Be it further resolved that the city (or village) shall cause all water pipes, sanitary sewers or like underground work existing under the area to be paved, to be inspected and repaired where necessary to put the same into first class condition, and that the city (or village) shall cause all additional water pipes, sanitary sewers and like underground work required under the area to be paved, except such storm drainage as provided for on the pavement plans, to be properly installed previous to date recommended for letting of pavement contract.

Be it further resolved that the State Highway Department be requested for all future repairs to the pavement included in this project, made necessary on account of faulty material or workmanship in such underground work of the repair of the same or the installation of additional underground work by the city (or village) on bill rendered by the State Highway Department when such repairs to the pavement will have been completed.

Be it further resolved that the city (or village) will at no time hereafter, without the written consent and approval of the State Highway Department, attach any further or other improvements to the improvement as made by the said department or make any change from these plans; nor will the city (or village) erect, install or permit to be erected or installed any traffic guide, signal, sign or other device to control traffic or for Advertising purposes except in conformity to the Rules and Regulations of the Michigan State Highway Department for uniform traffic control.

Be it further resolved that the above recommended for letting of pavement contract be January 27th, 1932, or as soon thereafter as possible.

FALL ON STREET REVIVES MEMORY

Accident in Chicago Loop Is Blessing to New Yorker.

New York—A man clad in a ragged suit and a dirty white sweater startled the Fifth avenue crowd one morning last week recently. He was just another bit of human flotsam and jetsam until very much interested when he found it was from in front of a speeding automobile, stumbled and sprawled his head on the curb.

The fellow got up not calmed his head in a bewildered manner. Traffic in the loop section of, but the man in the checkered clothes sought a safer street—he was suffering and unaccountably ashamed of his appearance. Fifth Sixteen of summary justice to one by an exasperated motorist, and Tuesday in the Chicago Tribune.

And that is why Henry or Gilbert Hamilton Wood, a wealthy real estate and insurance man, who had been found in the street after he had escaped from right on a blinding rain in loop Illinois street and who for the next week will be unable to close for a moment's sleeping, is now a happy, happy man although he could remember none of the minor details in sentence.

He Finds Himself.

He left Wood's office in the human after leaving suffering the blow on his head in climbing from the curb, and the way him was who he was as his memory began to function normally. He remembered his name and address and started to return home.

"Then I noticed this man who came back from the dead in thirty-eight years and was a stranger to myself," Wood said. "I looked in a mirror and saw a man with gray hair and a mustache. I thought I was dreaming. I pinched myself and looked in the mirror again. I was still there. I was a stranger to myself."

All efforts to find any trace of him failed for the last three days, during his health and business affairs were in good condition. The family felt he had suffered an accident and slowly gave up hope.

Wives Brother-in-Law.

Mr. Hayes's brother-in-law, Assistant Corporation Counsel Samuel Fulle, received a telegram signed with the missing man's name. A telephone call to Chicago followed and Fulle was telegraphed for Hayes's expenses home.

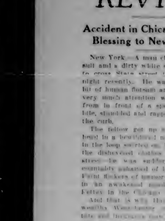
"I do not know where I have been nor what I have been doing all those months I have been away," said Mr. Hayes at his home.

"Things were mostly black after I fell out of an icy street-trying to pull up his clothes. I often no head them. I have a vague remembrance of having worked on a farm near Chicago.

"I recall the fall I suffered while walking along the street in Chicago. That brought back some of the memory. I began to search my pockets and discovered the last I was wearing had been bought in New York. That helped me to regain my identity. When I finally could remember I was appalled at my appearance."

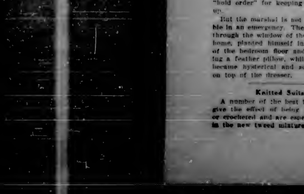
For Ensembles

The women came in use for season like cloth and soft, intertwined top. The suits are generally in their barrel effects but large enough for the hands, but the designs of scarfs are legion.



This spectator sports suit from Harrison Bros. is of soft wool jersey and shell in gray gray. It is worn with a fresh in wool, knighted in back with contrasting color.

"It Runs Like the Dickens," Says Alton



Alton Cobb, student at Ross' high school, Atlanta, Ga., found an old cream separator lying about his home and decided, since it wasn't serving it's original purpose, it might be put to some other good use. He converted it into an automobile engine and now has a machine that he says will run as well as any car. Alton says, "runs like the dickens."

HUMAN LABELS

Gregory has come to see me, and from a particularly ribbon pinned over the lapel of his coat I gather that he has won a prize. He was very much excited about it, and when he told me how he had worked night and day to win the honor, I could understand why the fellows saw fit to confer it upon him. I was much pleased with his success, for Gregory is one of my favorite students. They crowded into my office yesterday, for very many weeks, to ask questions concerning the requirements for the scholarship which I offered, and by and by two boys succeeded in getting ahead of the rest. Gregory because they had the most enthusiasm to be after it, and I gave a ring or a pin or a locket of some sort to those lucky boys. They were duly humiliated when they let me down, even that it was all a hoax was pointed out to them. They were inconsolable, but soon recently reunited out of a heartbreaking experience.

Most of our discussions are little more than visits.

MARRYING CLERK IS PROSPERING ON JOB

New York City Official Finds Couples Generous

New York—The job of deputy city clerk, which carries with it the duty of marrying couples in the municipal building, was declared in one of the city's most profitable jobs when Clerk Samuel Sullivan answered the little register ordinance committee in a public hearing. Hon. James J. Dooling said he has been making $10,000 a year out of it in addition to his annual salary of $5,000.

Almon even the marriage ceremony is functional and that it speeds up the city engine to just a half swoon and has been "Tennyson" begun to the twenty-second assembly district for three years.

The committee asked the deputy clerk made it clear that the ceremo thought Mr. Sullivan had been married to the city official for the "marrying clerk" job.

MR. STEED'S SUGGESTION

Wickham Steed, well known British journalist, who has been peeved with the United States for some time now, owing to the fact that Uncle Sam has refused to join the League of Nations, cancel war debts, and remove his tariffs against everything manufactured in Europe, has come forward with a new suggestion to put the United States "in its place" so to speak. Mr. Steed suggests that European nations forget their differences and show a united front against Uncle Sam. He would start the ball rolling by having Great Britain and France declare a two-year moratorium on the debts which they owe the United States government.

If the nations of Europe will only forget their differences and pull together for the good of the people of Europe, no nation will be more pleased than the United States. A great many of the ills of the world today are due to the fact that European nations will not forget their age-old quarrels. If they will only do this, and settle their various political understandings, it is very likely that a rift in the economic clouds will soon appear. If France, Germany and Great Britain, to say nothing of the smaller nations, would only get together and iron out some of their difficulties on an equitable basis, they would not need so much help and sacrifice from the United States.

Of course, it is expecting too much to assume that the European nations will get together amicably as suggested above. The only possible chance of their getting together would be not to help one another by mutual sacrifice or mutual agreement, but to present a united front for the trimming of somebody else. In this instance the somebody else would be Uncle Sam. But even at that we are inclined to be charitable, and if European nations could even agree on one thing we should find some consolation in this abstract fact, even if the agreement is directed against us. Maybe in agreeing to make faces at Uncle Sam they would forget to make so many faces at one another and some good would come out of it after all. Our advice to the European nations is to get together on some policy, even if they can't put it over. A European agreement on anything would be so wholesome that it might have world-wide beneficial effect even in the land which the agreement was directed against.

It was the fact that a European combination against the United States was always possible which kept the Senate from plunging the United States into the League of Nations, and it is the same fear which induced the Senate to ratify the World Court protocol only with safeguarding reservations. Now if Europe really does agree on a policy it will be an anti-American policy, and the predictions of the isolationists will be realized, except that fortunately Uncle Sam will not be tied up in the League or the League Court, and the European agreement will not mean so much to him as it otherwise would.

FIRE AGGRAVATES UNEMPLOYMENT

Speaking over the radio recently, Governor Richie of Maryland emphasized the necessity of making it possible for men, women and children to enjoy the privileges of American living. He pointed to well-equipped factories and to stores standing idle or operating on reduced force, and to willing workers unable to find employment. "Under present conditions, unnecessary and costly waste should be reduced to a minimum," he said, referring particularly to the economic waste from preventable fires. He called attention to the fact that our one-half billion dollar yearly fire loss is equal to the assets of the recently organized National Credit Institution formed to aid banks in restoring public confidence. He said that this figure also represents two and a half times the cost of the Panama Canal and was emphatic in pointing out that the loss from preventable fires is a significant factor in our economic situation, since there is no salvage in the national ash heap. He referred also to the appalling loss of human life resulting from fire.

He developed a point which is usually overlooked in considering fire losses: that a decreased store of raw materials actually means less potential prosperity and that although insurance usually covers the cost of reconstruction, business activities often become temporarily demoralized and industries lose customers and profits. A reduction in the number of preventable fires will aid in assuring more continuous employment to workers now engaged, since there is almost certain to be a loss of employment during the reconstruction period after an industrial fire.

Governor Ritchie dwelt upon the principal causes of fire: defective chimneys, accumulations of combustible waste materials, defects in electric, gas and oil installations, and exposure to fire on adjacent property, indicating that it is also important to maintain property so as to avoid fire hazards and to build to resist fire.

The National Fire Waste Council of the United States Chamber of Commerce has proclaimed 1932 as a year of concerted effort in fire prevention throughout the country. Governor Ritchie pointed out that the Council speaks with authority and is in earnest, and said: "May I urge that you make a resolution of vigilant fire carefulness throughout the year 1932, and that you mean it and carry it out, and thus contribute to waste elimination and to the return of our economic prosperity."

PRAISEWORTHY SAFETY MEASURE

It is gratifying to note that automobile manufacturers are paying considerable attention to safety in their new models. At the New York automobile show the news hawks noted the fact that more than 80 per cent of American cars are now equipped with reflex glass in their tail light. This will be appreciated particularly through the rural districts where the illumination of the roads is not as good as it is in the more populated centers.

The reflex tail light is based on the same principle as the glass used for the high powered flashing light used in light houses. With this glass, although the tail light may not be lighted, a warning is flashed to approaching drivers by means of reflected light from the headlamps of the on-coming car.

In adopting these lamps passenger car manufacturers have followed the lead established by truck makers who have used reflex glass for several years. In fact, more than 20 states now require that all trucks be equipped with reflecting lenses on their rear.

There are times when even the best lights fail and the car that is stalled by the side of a country road is in great danger unless protected by a device of this kind. This same type of light is used for warning signals along the highways and is a real contribution toward safety. It is gratifying to see that automobile manufacturers are using this equipment without being required to do so by statute.

Another source of gratification is the fact that a majority of the new 1932 automobiles have safety glass, either as standard or optional equipment. This will mean a smaller percentage of cut and injured persons following accidents, as safety glass is non-shatterable.

WHERE TAXPAYERS' MONEY GOES

Under the caption, "Fauperizing the Farmer," the Chicago Tribune recently commented on farmers in the Northwest who were encouraged to borrow money from the Government to buy seed last spring. About $4,000,000 was due September 30—and, according to the accounting of October 2, but $147,000 had been paid. A great part of the money will probably never be paid. As the old saying has it, you can't get blood from a stone.

The Tribune says: "They (professional farm relievers) have encouraged farmers to borrow . . . The result has been that the marginal farmers who cannot earn a living farming have been kept in business by the Government dole, and in consequence the campaigns which have been waged for reduction of surpluses have failed."

Thus farm relief, instead of improving the condition of the farmer, may, instead, plunge him further into depression. This is one more evidence that political panaceas, at the taxpayers' expense, not only usually fail but often aggravate the very condition they seek to remedy.

PUBLIC DEBTS CREATE HARD TIMES

A recent paragraph in the Investor's Column of the New York Sun is well worth repeating—and remembering. It said:

"Excessive use of public securities" (city, county, state and federal bonds) "is damaging to the public credit, causing declines in outstanding issues and loss to investors . . . They absorb funds from the investment markets that might better be left available against the time when legitimate business demands will increase. And . . . the expenditure of these funds on unneeded projects tends to delay inevitable readjustments in prices and wages and thus prolong the depression."

One has only to glance over the price-listings of bonds issued by various governmental divisions—principally state and county—to see how common it is for them to go into a decline. Some of them have no present value whatever, and perhaps never will have. They have raised taxes, often wasted public funds—and in many cases have served no useful purpose.

It is easy to vote for a bond issue, but hard to pay for it, along with accrued interest which often doubles the total debt. Misuse of public securities has been a big factor in creating hard times, it can bankrupt government and break the taxpayer.

ROAD WORK NEVER DONE

Road construction and road work are never done.

We have built thousands of miles of fine highways. But the inexorable march of progress makes more and still more roads necessary. The increased mechanization of agriculture has made it vital that the millions of farmers now living on unimproved roads be given means for fast, efficient and economical transport.

It might be said that a road dollar has never been entirely wasted. There have been "political roads and there has been uselessly expensive construction in areas where there was no need for it. These things must be discouraged. But every time we build a road we are adding another stone to the structure of our civilization. We are making possible a higher economic and social development for our people.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

By Frank P. Litschert

In view of the approach of the general disarmament conference in Geneva there has been a quickening of interest in the subject of armaments in the United States. It is the general opinion here, as well as in Europe that little will be accomplished in the meeting in way of effective disarmament. Instead of becoming international-alistic nations are becoming more and more nationalist. While a few months ago a great many people were inclined to believe that the nations of the world could disarm and put their faith in the League of Nations, the League Court, the Kellogg pact, the Lausanne agreement, and so on, the recent experiences of Europe and America with Japan, have sadly disillusioned most of us.

The Japanese are going on despite the League, the court, and various pacts and agreements. Ever since the Japanese entered Manchuria they have went further and further into China on the excuse of "chasing the outlaws." The Japanese have paid no attention to the League, and it is now evident that the only thing which would stop them would be a display of armed force on the part of the European powers combined with America. Since none of the nations now seem inclined to such display as of since some of the European nations, especially France, seem to be somewhat in sympathy with what the Japanese are doing it becomes evident that little forceful action, if any, will be taken. In the meantime China suffers the fate which comes to all people who are unable to help themselves.

This Sino-Japanese experience is not adding anything to the prospects of the disarmament conference, for that people reason that it is convincing most people that the best way for a nation to get along is to look out for its own interests first. The United States is willing to meet the other powers of the world in an open and above board attempt to secure equitable disarmament, but Uncle Sam is not going to Chinafy himself, in an effort to furnish a glittering and foolish example to the rest of the world.

In the meantime, interest in the United States has recently been aroused by a bill introduced in the House of Representatives by Congressman Carl Vinson of Georgia, providing for a ten-year program of warship replacement for the construction of 120 vessels at a total cost of $616,000,000 per year. Out of the 120 vessels only 15 would be additions to the navy, Mr. Vinson points out, the rest being replacements, which would bring our navy up to treaty strength and make it thoroughly efficient.

Authorized in the bill is 203,190 in new tonnage, divided as follows: Three aircraft carriers, two of 40,000 tons, one of about 15,200 tons. Nine six-inch gun cruisers, at least one of which is a flying deck cruiser of about 10,000 tons. Thirteen destroyer leaders of about 1,500 tons. Twenty-three submarines

The hearings on the Vinson bill which has been endorsed by the Secretary of the Navy Adams, will undoubtedly start in a big way the battle between the friends of the navy and the pacifists in Congress. Just what the outcome will be nobody knows, but it is a fact that the navy supporters have been strengthened in their stand by recent events all over the world. A break down of the disarmament conference soon to go into session, would greatly strengthen their hands, too.

In the meantime a gloomy tinge is added to the picture by Major General James E. Fechet, who declared, as he was retiring as chief of the Air Corps after thirty-three years army service, that Uncle Sam is the most hated and envied nation in the world and is living "protected in a fool's paradise." He added:

"I go in sorrow at the state of our armed forces, in sadness at the attitude of my country toward its defenders, and because of the false sense of security my people seem to feel.

"We house more than our share of the world's treasure. That treasure is now practically unprotected. Unless we do a hasty about face, our fool's paradise will soon be lost."

EDITORIAL COMMENT

By George B. Lockwood

Democratic House leaders says they intend to revise the tariff at this session of Congress. Their plan, which is not disclosed, may be a horizontal general reduction, rather than a revision schedule by schedule, which would presumably be preceded by extended hearings. Senate Democrats are said to have a plan to reduce the tariff on cement, lumber and sugar.

The present tariff on cement does not measure the difference in labor costs between Belgium and the United States, and therefore does not fulfill the pledge of either political party to bridge in tariff rates the difference in labor standards between this and competing countries. Wages in Philadelphia, according to a report of the Department of Labor, are more than three times as great in purchasing power as wages in Brussels. Belgian cement is moved to our seaboard with little cost, carrying a low water freight; often serving as ballast. The freight from Belgium to our seaboard is less than the cost of a short rail haul from interior points. On the other hand rail freight rates do not permit competition of Belgian cement in the Middle West. American cement production has been displaced in some cases, however, by Belgian cement at points in Pennsylvania. The reduction of the cement tariff could have only one effect, and that is to add to unemployment in the United States by giving an unfair advantage in our markets to the cheap labor output of Belgium and Germany.

More than a third of a million workers are jobless in our timber areas in this country because of the present inadequate lumber tariff. A small lumber tariff was imposed over the protest of the lobby representing American lumbermen who have large timber holdings in Canada, where half of the labor in this industry is Asiatic. Scandinavian and Russian lumbers interests also contested protection for the American industry. The result was that an inadequate tariff was fixed, and this only on certain classes of lumber. Lumber prices in the United States are controlled by foreign producers and at a level which has almost strangled the timber industry in this country.

Pressure for reduction of the sugar tariff is due to the fact that several of the larger New York bankers are heavily involved in investments in sugar plantations and centrals in Cuba. Their desire is to have greater control of the American sugar market to the displacement of our own domestic cane and beet sugar produc-

Dear Sir. For some time past we have been kep shivering within the welcome latitude of the stove, and we feared to drop the pen into the ink stand, where we expected to fish up icicles and halitosues, instead of ink drops. The cold "snap" however has not frozen up your correspondent, who gives this token of his remembrance to Daniel Webster: "I still live", and so far from being dull matters in Marion are positively lively, and comparatively livlier.

Sleighing is good and fillers are not tolerated in our midst. The general sentiment is one of hope and satisfaction. There is every indication that the town is to make greater progress in the next four years than during any ten of the past. The building of a school house in School District No. 9, so long a question of agitation, is now decided and one great cause of irritation is removed. The new school house, is nearly completed, and is as we know it would be, one of the best structures around us. It is a wonder, not only on account of its cottage style, but also as a monument to the energy that erected it with such small available means.

We find here the same as we have found elsewhere, a deep interest manifested by some in the domestic affairs of others; "more is the pity," for the sake of charity and good fellowship. But we hope the progress of Marion will bring about an improvement in this respect, needed surely as much as anything can be.

We could smile serenely, and await with patience the certainties which are to bless us and which must soon arrive. Welcome railroads, improvements, accession of population, for these do not and their mission with material benefits. The River Improvement is the staple of conversation at present. It must sooner or later be carried forward to completion. Its advantages are varied and numerous and a new impulse will be given to your already thriving village that will even "astonish the natives;" and you are destined tion which furnishes employment to thousands of American workers and outlet for farm production. It will be remembered that predictions were made by those opposing the increase in the sugar tariff given in the present law, that the additional cost of sugar would place a heavy burden on the American consumer. However, sugar has been sold in this country at lower prices than have been known since colonial days during the past eighteen months. The increase in tariff on raw sugar in the present tariff law is about ten per cent.

The sugar industry in this country already faces a serious situation, endangering the present employment and investment in the industry. It has been attacked from several directions. For the first time in the history of the country refined sugar was placed under the new tariff practically on a free trade basis. Importations of refined sugar from the raw sugar producing countries have been enormously increased. In England and Canada they have increased their already high tariff on sugar, while France has practically prohibited the import of sugar from non-French sources. The result has been to turn the sugar production of the whole world on the American market. Under the leadership of a New York lawyer, Mr. Chadbourne, an effort has been made to get the sugar producers of the world together and limit production, but this has failed. Already the United States is the dumping ground of the world's sugar, and the price makes the domestic industry unprofitable. On top of all this the department of justice is proceeding against the sugar institute, an organization of domestic sugar producers operating on a trade agreement said to have been approved by the government when it was made. It seems, however, that the Senate Democrats are not satisfied. They are planning to hit this domestic industry another blow, as it did destroy whatever employment it still affords to American workers. The inspiration of this course comes from foreign and internationalized banking and industrial interests whose activities were clearly visible when the present tariff law was being framed.

What the American people want brought about is not the further sacrifice of American to foreign interests, not the further tearing down of our economic defenses, but a policy of looking out for the American people, and the protection of their employment and standards of living. The Democratic leaders in Congress who are proceeding on the theory that Americans want more, rather than less, anti-American legislation, more, not less attack on American payrolls and wage standards, seem to have little comprehension of public sentiment.

Europe's Nerve Seems To Be Working

Oswald Garrison Villard, writing in "The Nation", says that "as long as debts and reparations stand in the way, it will not be possible to rehabilitate the shattered nerves and restore to balance the psychology of Europe."

"Signs of a collapse," continues Mr. Villard "are at hand and the handwriting is on the wall. There is little time left," etc. etc.

The United States recuperated after the World War by going back to work. It has been able to keep going because here wages and standards of living have been raised in some proportion to increase production. Europe has remained flat on her back, because deluded by the theory of cheapness through the cheapening of producers and destruction of consuming power as an effective weapon in foreign trade, wages and standards of living have been sinking, not rising. The consequence has been of course a final paralysis of industry.

Now, since we succeeded where Europe failed, it is insisted that it is up to America to merge her success with Europe's failure, and that all of us must go to the devil together. Mr. Villard is one of the chief propagandists and industrialists who having put their eggs in the European basket, insist that we must carry the basket without breaking an egg.

Europe's trouble does not seem to be, however, shattering nerves, as Mr. Villard asks us to believe. Europe's nerve has been working 100 per cent. The allies divided up territory equal in extent to that of the United States as the spoils of war. America took nothing. We lost in the war more money than any other nation, not excluding Germany, not only directly, but in the slowing down of our pre-war rate of growth in wealth. Half our national wealth at the beginning of the war was sunk in war with the causes or provocations of which we had nothing to do. Nevertheless Europe has demanded that we continue to drain our resources, bankrupt our government and impoverish our people to keep the worn-out and discredited European system of separation, hatred, exploitation and valley going. That has taken nerve and plenty of it.

Europe's shattered nerves do not so much need looking after as America's shattered fortunes. European nations do not need more nerve, but more vanity and unity, which they, and not we, must provide.

Soapy turned off Broadway; he wanted three months of food and shelter and knew one way to get it. At fifth avenue store was a conspicuous window. Soapy took a cobblestone and dashed it through the glass. People came running—

Led by a policeman. Soapy stood still. He smiled at the sight of the brass buttons. The cop hardly looked at Soapy. Men who smash windows take to their heels. Down the street a man ran to catch a car. The cop took after him.

Soapy, with disgust in his heart, loafed along. Across the street was a restaurant of no great pretensions. It catered to large appetites and modest purses. Into this place Soapy took his accusive shoes and sat at a table.

He consumed beefsteak, flapjacks, doughnuts and pie. And then to the waiter, he said: "Get busy and call a cop—and don't keep a gentleman waiting." "No cop for yonse," said the waiter with a voice like butter oilskin.

SLED DOGS to COMPETE for OLYMPIC HONORS

Seppala on the Trail

Seppala and Two of His Huskies

Emile St. Godard Winning Quebec Derby

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

It is far cry from the sub-zero temperatures and the snow-covered hills surrounding Lake Placid, in northern New York to sunny California and the great stadium in Los Angeles where the 1932 olympic games will be held this summer, but there is a connection between the two. Starting in Canada more than 3,000 years ago, olympic games have been held at more or less regular intervals in many different countries during those 30 centuries, but this year for the first time in history the games will include sled dog races.

Obviously it would be interesting for any sled dog racer to be held at the same time and place as the other functions of olympic competition, but it is especially so for Leonhard Seppala, of Nome, Alaska, who for the second time in his career as a driver of dog teams will be the center of attention at the Olympic games.

Seppala is one of the finest sled dog drivers in the world, and there on February 9 and 10 the names of "Scotty" Allan, driver of the Canadian team, and Seppala will be linked with those of the great "champions" who have competed in the Olympic games since the days of ancient Greece.

Unfortunately for those who like their sport to contain a reasonable dose of the element of uncertainty, Scotty Allan, on all hands as the result of his experience as a dogs of dependable calibre as racers. His teams were responsible for his two victories in the 1928 classic. In 1927 he was defeated by "Iron Man" John Johnson, who for continuous record never attempted other than 300 miles. Thanks to an accident which gave him a good team in addition to his own, Allan was 74 hours and 14 minutes behind ever made in any contest of the kind.

This feeling Allan was not discouraged. Both he and Seppala, with the latter's team of 14 dogs, left Nome on the same day, and for 1,000 miles they were never more than a few hours apart. Then Seppala's team began to forge ahead, and finally, with Allan's dogs exhausted, he was forced to "limp in" four days behind the winner. There assembly the winners of the other contests, to race over a course of about 120 miles, run in heats of 40 miles a day.

Quebec attracts the best drivers and teams from all parts of America, and fiercely race-high during the three days, attaining a fever-heat on the last day of the race. The winner of the world's championship in the first international was Arthur T. Walden, of New Hampshire, experienced Alaskan sourdough musher, who started training dogs across the frozen wilderness back in 1908, during the gold rush, and who was dogmaster with tremendous thrill in the Antarctic.

In 1928 the international was won by a French Canadian, Jean Labat, of Quebec, coach to the station of the Canadian Earl Grayson of Le Pas, took the next championship, and into the arena of the 1931 dog-sled contest came Emile St. Godard, still in his 20s, to begin his unparalleled record in dog racing. He is now the only man who has won three championships. Frama Gagnon won the 1926 race over St. Godard

In order to prevent the Olympic games from being a contest between dog teams and airplanes, the Olympic committee has decided that the dog-sled race will be run over a course of 50 miles, which is considerably shorter than the usual distance. Even at that, however, the dogs will have to travel at a speed of 10 miles an hour to win.

Four contestants were under the drivers' care ordinarily only three thousand were competing in the sets of entries and a letter arranged for the first time in history the games will be held in different parts of the United States, Canada and Alaska, representing among other countries the one at Los Angeles disclosed, are the eastern races at Poland Spring, Maine; Lakeside, N. The western race will pull a big purse and is run each year on Washington's birthday over a 25-mile course, and attracts a large crowd of spectators from all over the Northwest.

NATION'S FINANCE STANDS TEST WELL

Economic Policy Commission of Bankers Association Points Out How 22,000 Banks Protect Public Interest

OVER 22,000 banks all over the United States are "quietly and efficiently serving their communities, keeping idle money business enterprises over their difficulties, helping many investors to earn income, helping provide the economic activities that mean jobs—in short spending power in their areas of influence and faithfully keeping sound even the working capital and savings funds of their depositors," the Economic Policy Commission of the American Bankers Association says in a recent survey adding:

"It surely stands strikingly to the credit of the banking profession that, during a period of unparalleled international economic depression, this vast majority of bankers have so competently, so conscientiously and so courageously met the difficulties and obligations. The climax of the drought, the demoralization of agriculture, the liquidation of industry, the breakdown of trade, the inability of so many borrowers to meet their obligations to the banks, the shipment of gold—these and the vast majority of bankers have so competently, so conscientiously and so courageously met the difficulties and obligations. The climax of the drought, the demoralization of agriculture, the liquidation of industry, the breakdown of trade, the inability of so many borrowers to meet their obligations to the banks, the shipment of gold—these and the widespread drought the intelligent advertising of many products that have to do with bodily care. I refer to the hesitancies and disturbances of such things as more healthful shoes, more effective cosmetics, food products with more wholesome values of nutrition and countless other practical ideas that have become commonplaces of our daily business life—and that have become a part, too, of the very texture of the personal habits and wealth of great masses of our people.

If it has been good advertising and good business for so many of our manufacturers to spend millions of dollars thus to inculcate new habits of personal hygiene and personal care, is it not good business and good advertising for our banking interests to lay similar stress during the next period upon the value of new habits of thrift habits and customs of our people?

Bankers above all are interested in such a campaign of education. They have much to gain by a state of sound financial health among the people and must to lose by epidemics of economic instability such as have swept the country during the past two years.

The man who has in better times been favored with too much credit rather than not enough is finding it is hard to pay his interest now with low prices for the products of labor.

Napoleon No Scholar

Napoleon did not distinguish himself in school. At one time he was 42nd in a class of 58 pupils. Napoleon's scholastic career was not brilliant and he received the commendation in the artillery in 1785 when leaving given evidence of any marked ability, except, perhaps, that of holding his own counsel and of carrying things to the end any sentence uttered. These traits, which afterward made him feared equally in the council chamber and on the battle field, he inherited from his mother.

WOULD ALTER OUR FINANCIAL HABITS

By HOMER C. STEPHENSON
Former President American Bankers Association

H. C. STEPHENSON

THE most constructive action that can be taken toward bringing about a new order of things in our business life is the development of a more balanced attitude on the minds of our people in regard to the right relationship between saving and spending. There is more than a sentimental basis during prosperity so as to be able to spend during depression than in a whole library full of essays and tables and books on political economy.

I do not believe it is an impracticable dream to bring about an era of more intelligent saving and spending on the part of our people. It is not impossible to change the habits of the population. It has been done in many lines. The habits of our people have been improved and the health of the nation promoted in many ways by consistent programs of advertising and education that have brought about better hygiene understanding and practices.

The saddest profession has virtually banished the secrets of some diseases by scientific, intelligent campaigns of preventive sanitary measures and inoculations, requiring new understandings, new habits among many portions of our people. Also a large part of this evolution of public health consciousness has naturally developed through the intelligent advertising of many products that have to do with bodily care. I refer to the hesitancies and disturbances of such things as more healthful shoes, more effective cosmetics, food products with more wholesome values of nutrition and countless other practical ideas that have become commonplaces of our daily business life—and that have become a part, too, of the very texture of the personal habits and wealth of great masses of our people.

If it has been good advertising and good business for so many of our manufacturers to spend millions of dollars thus to inculcate new habits of personal hygiene and personal care, is it not good business and good advertising for our banking interests to lay similar stress during the next period upon the value of new habits of thrift habits and customs of our people?

Bankers above all are interested in such a campaign of education. They have much to gain by a state of sound financial health among the people and must to lose by epidemics of economic instability such as have swept the country during the past two years.

WATER CIRCUIT HAS BEEN COMPLETED

Completion of This Project Gives the North Side of City Assured Fire Protection

Work on placing a water main connecting the water system between the Chicago and Belvedere Club grounds across the upper channel, thus making a complete circuit on this part of the city water works system, that has been in progress of construction for some weeks past, was completed last week and the contractors with their equipment left for points further south late in the week.

The improvement work is important and was necessary and most desirable, especially so to residents in the eastern part of the city and summer residents occupying cottages on the Club grounds mentioned.

ASSETS FROZEN—AND WHO FROZE THEM

It should be brought to the attention of the public that banks generally were never so liquid as when the present depression struck. It is of record that some banks have paid out as much as 85 per cent of their deposits which is in itself a remarkable record. Then when forced to close some of the unthinking members of the community branded those splendid bankers as failures or worse. Times worse and they glibly reported that the bank had closed because of frozen assets.

The "frozen assets" which caused such banks to close were in most cases the assets of loyalty, courage and community spirit which were lacking in the depositors. From reports which have recently come to our notice the public generally is beginning to realize that a local bank is only as good as the people who do business with it and that a community without banking facilities is soon without business of any kind, and property values of all types go on the toboggan never to recover.

This realization has resulted in a splendid spirit of cooperation of depositors when they are properly appointed with the true situation.

GOLD MEDAL CONTEST HELD IN BAPTIST CHURCH

Twelve years ago last Saturday national prohibition law became effective, and the Gold Medal Declamatory contest put on the evening before at the Baptist Church was sponsored by the local Women's Christian Temperance Union as an observance of the anniversary.

Helen Ikens, Merle Ikens, Emil Kortheck, Dorothy Miller and Chas. Straigiey were the contestants for the medal was awarded to the first named.

The efforts of the young people and the temperance address by Rev. Marks which followed were well received. Other local pastors and the Baptist Church choir also assisted with the program.

Prohibition was adopted to lessen the consumption of liquor after many methods had been tried and found wanting. It has been bitterly opposed by a noisy minority but no social advance has ever been made without great effort.

Here are some of the results: It made liquor an outlaw, stopped liquor advertising, drove liquor from the main streets to the criminal hiding place. It removed the saloon with its public invitation to drink; its grip on politics; its certain introduction to vice and crime.

It reduced insanity due to drink and drink caused crime; it has almost abolished poverty due to drink. It has helped make our standard of living the highest in the world and has certainly been a factor in increasing the high school enrollment in the U. S. from two million to nearly five million between 1920 and 1930.

Liquor does not further well being. Total abstinence does. Liquor is of the past. Total abstinence of the future. Alcohol as a beverage has no place among forward looking people.

to enjoy that commercial importance which your geographical location and natural advantages entitle you to.

We do not claim the spirit of prophecy, but we do claim what has been realized by other towns will be realized in Charlevoix in redoubled measure. There is not another place in Michigan of twice the population that commands the trade from so large a section of country. And what will it be when you have the benefit of a cash market—which the river improvement will give you.

In the new districts of a country, everything turns on the facilities of communication. If these be lacking, no progress worth mentioning is possible. If they be supplied new districts soon vie, in the development of their resources with the old over which they have advantage of unexhausted richness of virgin soil. Chopping cordwood may answer after a fashion, but will never fully develop the other resources of the country. Do you want competition in the market.

These are the plain teachings of common sense, and in view of them can any one hesitate as to what course to pursue? Has any one a moral right to stand back and even say "I won't go, and then I will not be censured." How it is a moral obligation which every individual owes to the community in which he lives to be in favor of improvement. Settlers to the front on Saturday, Jan. 27.

The 27th—We have good grounds for believing that the people of the Pine Lake region are beginning to awake from their lethargy, and will on the 27th make a great effort toward the accomplishment of the project which is to "let them out of the woods." Our success lies in our union—without union there is no strength. Contension has been the great agency of our ill-success in the past, and we hope the fact has become evident to all. Reasonable assistance from every man is what the cause wants. A little from all will carry the work to a successful end. Let nothing stand in the way of your attendance at the mass meeting next Saturday.

RICHARDS GOT THE JOB BECAUSE HE HAD A TELEPHONE

When an application is made for work, employers are quite likely to ask for a telephone number. For they know that the easiest and quickest way to get into touch with additional help is by telephone.

Your home telephone is an important asset in business and social life. It places you within instant reach of business associates and friends. And, in emergencies, such as fire or sudden sickness, it will summon help immediately.

Of all the things you buy, probably none gives so much for so little as your telephone.

C. OF C. HEARS FINE SPEAKER

GIVES FINE TALK ON CAUSES OF PRESENT CONDITIONS

Gives Bankers, Credit For Courage During The Present Situation Of Financial Affairs.

The January meeting of the Chamber of Commerce Association met in the K. of P. hall last Thursday evening with a large attendance among which was a number of visitors from the towns in the eastern part of the county.

The banquet for the occasion was served by the American Legion Auxiliary and was thoroughly enjoyed.

Following the banquet the usual business meeting of the association was held, including a report from the secretary-treasurer. Commander Lee Allard of Leslie T. Shapton Post No. 258 American Legion, gave some pertinent facts of the co-operation necessary to increase the probability of getting the 1933 State Convention of the American Legion for Charlevoix. Mayor Vought of Boyne City and Herman Meyer of Boyne City, members of the county republican committee, also made a few remarks.

Gerald F. Bush, superintendent of the public schools, was called upon to introduce the speaker of the evening, Webster H. Ferris, Superintendent of the State Department of Public Instruction, under whom our superintendent of schools has had the privilege of working for a number of years.

Mr. Pierce chose as his subject, "Frozen Assets", and dealt first with his topic as applied to financial assets and giving the bankers credit for their courage during the present conditions.

However he made it very evident that there were other, numerous and valuable assets that everyone possesses that were in the same condition as the monetary assets, such as friendship, consideration and the realization of the brotherhood of man, the last named song from the days of the Master and Savior, Jesus Christ, as needing liquidation more than ever before.

During the speaker's discourse of the evening other sources of taxation than those used at present which are working such hardships on the few and bringing about intolerable conditions.

The existing school system was vigorously defended at this time and that contend that there are too many graduates being turned out of the colleges and high schools he asked "what would become of those that were refused or turned away from these institutions?" Such a course would only add to our present difficulties.

After the meeting the opinion was expressed that the discourse of the evening was well worth coming a hundred miles to hear and all those present thoroughly enjoyed it.

The February meeting will be held on the evening of February 25th, with Director of Conservation, George R. Hogarth the principal speaker.

Following is the committee list of the Association for the current year:

LOOKING TOWARD COMING NAVIGATION SEASON

Captain L. L. Hill spent several days at St. James and in Charlevoix interviewing various parties and getting their views on passenger and freight traffic as well as looking to some extent into the summer mail schedule between the points named for the 1932 season. The mail contract was awarded to James H. Gallagher of Boyne City last year and was for a five year period hence the contract is held by him at the present time. During the season of navigation recently closed government business over the Charlevoix-St. James route was through an undreaming of Mr. Gallagher and Mr. Hill with the latter's ship, Marshall II, captain Hill in command, as mail carrier. Just what boat will transfer the mails over the route the coming season is at this time problematical but it is hoped some stanch Captain Hill has a ship, but no mail contract over the route. Captain Gallagher is not entering for four more seasons, but no ship.

We feel confident that the matter will be ironed out ere long, and that the opening of the season will find the route satisfactorily established in the interest of the public.

P. M. CONTEST IS DECIDED

CLARENCE MEGGISON RECOMMENDED FOR POSITION

Present Manager of Co-Operative Association, On Board of Education and Legislature

The friendly contest that has been carried on for the recent several months relative to a successor to Postmaster George W. Weaver was finally settled last Friday, when Congressman Frank P. Bohn placed the name of Mr. Clarence Meggison before President Hoover for the appointment, together with the congressman's recommendation favoring Mr. Meggison for the coveted position.

For some months past, in fact more than a year, this appointment has been held in suspense, by no mean time several candidates have fought the fight for supremacy in the eyes of politicians and lobbyists in their official wire. In this there was plenty of strenuous effort put forth by the candidates and their friends. However at no time has there been any display of acrimonious feeling as between the several candidates and supporting friends.

Taken all in all it has been a good will fight, finally ended, completely in its friendliness to the point where, now that it is finally settled, the friends of supporters can, with their son of supporters can, with their son ship, congratulate Mr. Meggison.

Mr. Meggison needs no introduction to the Charlevoix public. He is a Charlevoix product, born here and educated here. Ago where he has since resided and for the past few years has been manager for the Charlevoix Co-operative Association and this in such a manner as to merit the approval of its board of directors from year to year and to patrons continuously during the term of his stewardship, all of which stands as a testimonial to his business ability and integrity.

He is a member of the American Legion, Leslie T. Shapton Post No. 226, of which he is Welfare Officer, prominently identified with the work as well as in all other lodges and civic affairs and at present a valued member of the Board of Education.

Mr Weaver retires from the local post office where for more than nine years he has faithfully and efficiently attended to his duties as postmaster and in his retirement retains the esteem of the general public.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH PILGRIM CIRCLE MEETS

The Pilgrim Circle of the Congregational Church met at the home of Mrs. Hyrum Saltonstall on Mason Street Wednesday afternoon.

There was a good attendance present and the attention of the circle was directed to the forthcoming dinner-annual conference to be held in Europe in the near future, and especially to the lady member of the United States delegation, Mrs. Mary E. Woolley, President of Mt. Holyoke College, who is a nationally known Congregationalist. The outcome of her activities at this conference is being watched with interest.

Delightful refreshments were served by the hostesses.

Tournament

The district basketball tournament will be held in Charlevoix this year on the 3rd, 4th, and 5th of March.

The towns taking part in the tournament will probably be Boyne City, Harbor Springs, East Jordan, Mancelona and Charlevoix in Class "C", and in Class "D" Pellston, Boyne Falls, Alba, Central Lake, Bellaire, Mackinaw City and Ellsworth.

There will be no consolation tournament this year.

Drama Club

The one-act plays which will be presented in the High School assembly hall on the evening of February 3rd are well under way. Also plans are being perfected for a big surprise announcement soon. The executive committee for the Big Production of the year has let this much be known: that it is something so new can afford to miss, that the settings will be most quaint and unique, that the play itself is a mixture of gay absurdity and charming drama, that prices will be only 25 and 35 cents and five cents a week for seven weeks and your ticket will be assured. Begin immediately!

Enjoyable Speech

On Friday morning the High School and Junior high had the pleasure of hearing Webster H. Pierce, Superintendent of Public Instruction speak.

Mr. Pierce used as a theme for his address, the sayings of four of our great Presidents, Roosevelt, Washington, Lincoln and Wilson. One thing that he quoted from Roosevelt would make an excellent motto for us all to adopt that was: "Don't fool, play fair and hit the line hard." He also left us with a piece of excellent advice: Remember that your heads are for other use than a knot to keep you from unraveling."

Seventh Grade Social

The seventh grade sewing class is getting along nicely with aprons, head bands and holders which will later be worn in cooking class.

The geography class has been making an interesting study of the Balkan countries. They find these countries unusually interesting with their famous ruins, cathedrals and art galleries.

Eighth Grade

The girls in Mrs Hutton's cooking class have recently completed their first breakfast menu and are starting to prepare the next.

Ninth Grade

The ninth grade spent an evening of pleasure in the gym Saturday evening. Games directed by Miss Dasef brought unusual talent into play. Refreshments of fruit punch and sandwiches served in the Junior High building topped off a fine evening in a very desirable manner. The presence of the grade acting as host for the occasion.

Assembly

In the first of a series of assembly programs commemorating the birth of George Washington, a number of Junior High students worked together to produce an interesting group of talks based on the life of the "Father of His Country."

POLAR BEARS WIN CONTEST

GET REVENGE FOR FORMER DEFEAT BY MANISTEE

Score Stood 12 to 6 at Half; Knotted 14 all at Third But Final Was 22 to 16 For Bears

A good crowd thoroughly enjoyed watching the Polar Bears get revenge for the one-point defeat handed them by the Manistee team a short time ago, seeing a hotly contested game wind up 22 to 16 in favor of the Polar Bears.

The local boys took an early lead by was soon tied by the Manistee team. However at the end of the first half the score stood 12 to 6 in favor of the Bears.

The third quarter found the Manistee team rejuvenated and they scored eight points while holding the Charlevoix team to two.

Action came thick and fast in the final quarter and by some fine floor work and a good eye for the basket the Bears were soon out in front, running their score up to 22 while holding the Manistee team to a final score of 16.

The girls contest between the Red Flashes of Petoskey and the "Green" team representing Charlevoix was far more interesting than the score would indicate and was thoroughly enjoyed by the spectators, even though decidedly in favor of the girls in red.

In the other preliminary the East-port boys were just a little better than the locals and rowed out ahead in the final minutes of play and making an extra basket just as the final whistle blew.

UNUSUAL SIGHT CAN BE SEEN ON ROUND LAKE

Owing to the fine fall weather that is merging into spring weather there is a total absence of ice on the lakes in this vicinity which would appear to work a hardship on those who are fond of fishing through the ice in the winter.

However this following was not to be outdone by Dame Nature so some courageous and ingenius fellow proceeded to build a raft, put his fishing shanty on it and tow it into Round Lake and proceed with the fishing as usual.

A few mornings following the appearence of the first raft there could be seen a number more which at the present time has increased to nearly a half dozen.

$75.00 FINE ASSESSED FOR ILLEGAL FISHING

In the case of the People vs. Karl Killoran the latter was fined $75.00 with the alternative of a sixty-day jail sentence in default of the fine assessed.

The case came before Justice Hoyt's court at Sutton's Bay last week and was under a charge of illegal fishing in Michigan waters.

Killoran paid the fine stating that he would take an appeal to the circuit court. He is also out ten bonds of $.75 taxen by Captain C. J. Allers, some $7 which are of smaller much that can be legally used in Michigan.

After paying the fine assessed by the court Killoran departed for Wisconsin, where he is a resident. Two or three other charges for violation of the statutes relative to commercial fishing can be brought against the defendant, according to Captain Allers, but for the present they are held in abeyance.

Killoran also loses his license, this having been automatically revoked following his conviction, a mandatory provision under the statutes, therefore he can not do further fishing in Michigan waters until he procures a new license from the department at Lansing, Wednesday.

BIG ENGINEERING PROJECTS OF 1931

Many Changes in Commercial Geography of World.

Washington.—Important engineering projects of this country and others in the commercial geography of the world are listed by the National Geographic Society. Completion within the year of the Boulder dam on the Colorado river, the world's highest engineering structure, is the outstanding achievement of the year.

The year saw the greatest financial construction program in the history of the United States," says the bulletin, "because of a new high record for federal, state and local governments. More than 11,000 miles of federal and highway aids were in the construction in a year of over a third of a billion dollars.

"Under contributory fee motor vehicle laws, which are now in force in seven states, the number of motor vehicles having license and license plates increased from 23,000,000 to 26,000,000 during the year, and the revenue from fees and taxes rose correspondingly from $1,000,000 to $1,000,000.

"At Wilmington, the United States government brought almost to completion a new harbor on the Cape Fear river, and is progressing on the harbors at Charleston, S. C., and Savannah, Ga.

"The Atlantic deep water highway, the intracoastal canal, completion of the year was that of the New Jersey section, which connects the Delaware river with Raritan bay at the lower end of New York harbor.

"Virginia, with a population of 2,421,851, has a total railway mileage of 6,000 miles, and Kentucky, one of the leading cities of Louisville.

"The Panama canal, completed in 1914, has been in use for 17 years, and its traffic is approaching the 30,000,000 ton mark. Its tolls have been reduced from $1.25 to $1.20 per ton.

"The Alaska railway, owned and operated by the United States government, is the only railroad in Alaska. It runs from Seward, on the coast, to Fairbanks, in the interior, a distance of 470 miles. It is operated with a fleet of 30 locomotives, 1,000 freight cars and 30 passenger cars

DREAM OF HIDDEN GOLD COMES TRUE

One of Most Dramatic Stories of Lost Riches.

Maxlen City—Twenty years ago, a German dreamed of a hoard of hidden gold. Now he has found a tunnel which he nothing will lead him to the treasure of a long-dead king.

The scene of this is in the hinterland of Mexico, and the story is one of the most dramatic in the annals of lost riches.

Twenty years ago Ernesto Loerk was a young business man in the German town of Dusseldorf. He was then just turned forty and his children and himself were enjoying him to put his usual prosperous in a handsome little corporation.

Almost a year after his wife died he had a vivid and remarkable dream. The scene was the crest of a high mountain and along a narrow track wound a long line of light-skinned and scantily clad Indians. They marched in single file, and on the shoulders each one bore a weight which seemed to disappear into the heavens.

Many times Loerk had read steadily, adding to the world's known mileage that was opened along the east coast. Finland, Brazil, Turkey, the Philippines, Cuba, Peru, Argentina, Spain, Colombia, Manchuria, Japan and Ecuador.

In the United States an important link was built in southwestern Pennsylvania, a railroad from the corner of Kansas into New Mexico; the Florida East Coast railway, and the Nevada, connecting the site of the Hoover dam with the railways.

To the Netherlands the first bridge of Doon Bridge, over the Amsterdam-Rijnkanaal was put into use. These 33,000 acres were reclaimed from the sea after considerable submerged arable land.

POVERTY AND OLD AGE

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Emeritus Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

Nature was not telling me today that Hereafter had gone into the folks' home it. We have many Hereafter for a Friend and Neighbor. He was a young man when we were children. He was a young man when we were married. He was a young man when we were old enough to know better, and he was a young man when we were old enough to know better, and he was a young man when we were old enough to know better.

It was not that he was tiny or incompetent. Hard work did not drain his energies. Responsibility did not wobble upon him. He was a real force in the firm with whom he was connected for forty years or more, and he rose from one step to another of the best positions in the commercial city.

Brewster's weakness was that he was no thought for himself. There he did not know the meaning of. He spent his money as freely as it came to him. People in need, he was easily it seemed, to step out of his degree. He was always a friend ready to say to him. Therefore, what are you going to do when you get old? You won't be able to earn as much then as you do now, and you must like living on a little and not quite that you do.

"Oh, I've always been lucky," he said. "Some one will take care of me. Maybe I won't ever get old, anyway. I'm going to begin to save one of these days."

So much for how small his income is every one can solve a little, and to who, since nothing was laid by, he will not have an independent old age.

Who Was Who?

PEERING before the camera barefoot and with her feet in the inevitable pose to make the matter conclusive, a retired Lutheran preacher of the Ozarks, recently got his name and his picture in the papers as the original Barefoot Boy who inspired the American poet, John Greenleaf Whittier, to write his well known praises of carefree boyhood out in the country. An examination of the details of his life, however, and of the circumstances under which Whittier wrote his poem, lead to the conclusion that the Nebraskan and the barefoot boy could not have been one and the same person.

The fine preacher states that he came to Allerton from the old country in 1862. Whittier in Essex in haste writing "The Barefoot Boy" while he was selling the Middlesex boundary at Lowell, Mass., and to have taken his theme from seeing a boy there standing out in the mud in the field, not one shoe nor stocking. It is a matter of record that Whittier called the Merrimac Standard for six months, starting in the fall of 1830, poetic years before the preacher ever saw the shores of this country. It is not likely that he would have been even a copper game on the inside to render him true, for he was then drawing the line at $1.75 for a small editorial grant.

I know what to give him for his colds and stomach upsets. He eats heavens blessed Cottolene and Cottolene pie from morning to night, practically. I have used it freely with my boy and he loves it. It always does him good."

NO CANCELLATION

It looks like a tough year for the debt cancellationists in the United States. The warning attached to the moratorium approval in Congress indicated that the people of the United States were opposed to the cancelling of the European debts was an eye-opener to the professional propagandists across the big pond. But the agitators for European interests did not give up long entirely. They immediately started a barrage to the effect that the United States would cancel the debts if Europe would only agree to disarm and make such agreement at the coming disarmament conference.

But even this has become an academic issue. Europe is not going to disarm at the Geneva conference or at any other conference in the measurably near future. The reason is not hard to find. France is in the saddle in Europe, backed as she is by her allies in Central Europe, and French officials have stated in Parisian newspapers only recently that France would forego neither its armament or its reparations.

So much for the question of disarmament at Geneva. Of course there is some justification for the European position on disarmament. So long as Soviet Russia, admittedly at war with the capitalist world, and so long as Soviet Russia maintains its great standing army and its universal military training of men, women and children, Western Europe would be taking a long step toward committing suicide if she were suddenly to lay down her arms.

Getting back to the debt question, then, it is obvious that even if we were to agree to cancel the debts if Europe were to disarm, the agreement would not be made by European nations, and if made, would not be kept. For if the debts are once cancelled they are cancelled for all time to come, while the question of arming again could be revived in one year in ten or in twenty.

Of course Europe would be willing to cut down the conditional reparations if Uncle Sam would agree to cut down the debts by a similar sum, thus loading all the burden on to the backs of the American taxpayers. But Europe will not shoulder any of the burden itself. France, it will be noted, is adamant in the matter of giving up unconditional reparations—because she keeps this tribute herself and if cancelled, she would lose it.

The situation is complicated by conferences of one kind or another, and it is difficult now to see where it will end. It is evident America cannot enforce the payment of these debts by the use of armies and fleets if Europe decides to repudiate, there is nothing to prevent this being done except the penalties which either individuals or nations must pay for national dishonor. But the political issues in this country who attempts to unload any more of this war burden on the one nation which asked for and got nothing out of the war, will hereafter do so at the risk of popular repudiation. The sentimental and financial internationalists who have gone on sacrificing the interests of the American prosperity have had their day in the United States, but that day at last is over.

TAX REBELLION PROSPECTS

Most of us have received various reports, speeches and what-not issued by the government. In newspaper and magazine offices they come in bales.

Last year the government printing office turned out four billion copies of such matter, at a cost of about $20,000,000. Sales to the public returned $215,743 of this. The rest was free issue at the expense of taxpayers.

Most of this matter, furthermore, is sent free through the mails, thus building up the postal deficit, and again taking money from the pockets of taxpayers. Some of these publications are, of course, valuable and constitute a legitimate function of government. But the bulk of them are either useless or consist of political utterances which serve only to glorify some "statesman" or bureau in the public eye. And we all pay for it.

Twenty million or so dollars is a comparatively small item in the cost of government. But the free-printed, post-free document "racket" is a good example of wastefulness and extravagance in the use of public funds.

The taxpayer is a patient, long-enduring creature, but cannot even his patience be strained to virtual rebellion? There are signs of it.

The Massachusetts Tax Association said recently: "Recognition must be give to the gradually awakening tax consciousness of the public, which more and more is causing the average citizen to realize that expenditures in government must be reduced or curtailed just as industry has been forced to deflate its costs in order to exist."

Shrines In American History

By JAMES W. BROOKS

Rising Sun Tavern

Germantown, Virginia

Gathering place of patriots as the Revolutionary winds began to blow, and, where, before the broad open fireplace Washington, Monroe, Jefferson, Patrick Henry and Doctor Mercer made plans for the freedom of the Colonies. Here Washington stopped on his victorious return after Yorktown. Storied markers to vanishing years are these old taverns which no modern day traveler should miss.

COOLIDGE LAYS OUT PLATFORM

Perhaps the most significant political utterance of the past month, in the view point of many Washington observers, was from Calvin Coolidge. After a long period of silence, the former President made public in a carefully phrased article, his considered views of the business and economic situation.

The recovery program advocated by the Hoover administration was not mentioned, nor was Mr. Hoover. But the tone of the whole article indicated very clearly the attitude Mr. Coolidge may be expected to take, should he discuss the prosperity issue during the coming national campaign. He will be one of those, it appears, who will resist all attempts to attribute the business slump to the Republican administration.

Blame for the present economic plight of the United States, in so far as blame can be determined, rests with all Americans, and not upon any particular person or group, Mr. Coolidge declared. "The most we can say is that there has been a general lack of judgment so widespread as to involve practically the whole country," he wrote. "We have found that we were not so big as we thought we were. We shall not feel so elated, but we shall be much safer."

One of the "most important parts of his article was devoted to a defense of the nation's banking system. "Banks are an absolute necessity for the transaction of business," Mr. Coolidge insisted. "If it were possible to conceive of all of them being closed, starvation would face most of us inside of ten days."

"Those who are engaged in hoarding currency are probably no safer as a class than those who keep their money in banks. They are injuring themselves and everybody else. They are in the position of not taking their part of the risks of life, and are trying to make themselves safe by letting others carry their risks for them."

SOUND ADVICE FROM WASHINGTON

Observance of the George Washington bicentenary throughout the United States this year will turn the minds of millions to the teachings of the first President, and to the lessons which may be drawn from his life for application to present-day problems.

The greatest of historians will focus their attention this year on Washington, and their writings on this subject will naturally be of general interest. Some of the most pertinent of the utterances which have already come to light are from the pens of James Truslow Adams, Rupert Hughes, and Arthur C. Bartlett.

Washington was like Coolidge in his insistence on thrift and economy in national government. James Truslow Adams writes in the Woman's Home Companion: "It was natural that he should counsel us to preserve the national credit and use it as sparingly as possible. Each generation, he believed, should pay its own debts and not burden its successors. Not only that, but the government should be as frugal and careful in expense as might be."

As a farmer, Washington was a practical man. "He was no hobby farmer," writes Arthur C. Bartlett. "He was a practical husbandman, and his first concern was the increase of his land. The improvement of his house and his grounds he added for years only with hard labor for his stock, tried out new seeds in his fields, experimented with the soils on his farm. His greatest interest centered in wheat, most of his other crops chiefly for home consumption. He obtained wheat seeds from Siberia and later from other parts of the world."

The human Washington is the subject chosen for discussion by Rupert Hughes. "Among all the great men who have stirred the world profoundly," he writes in an article recently published, "Washington was the least fanatic, the most normal, sane and balanced of men. He could have defended his griefs and conquered his dispairs if he had not been able to relax."

If more Americans in public life would follow Washington's example and strive only for the welfare of the people, seeking their immortality in avoidance of self-seeking and partisan warfare, a considerable difference might be visible in the national wellbeing."

DAWES IN NEW ROLE

The naming of General Dawes as President of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation serves to put invisible teeth into the act—just what is needed! Dawes is a very plain-spoken man and his manner of emphasizing his words became historic during the World War, when his famous "hell an' Maria" protest gave the "American language" a new boost in international conversation.

Dawes as Vice President of the United States, as Ambassador to the Court of St. James, and as a representative of the United States in straightening out financial plans, and in helping to promote peace through agreements for disarmament, has served his country with much great ability that he has become a glorified American institution.

THE LAND BANK

The Federal land banks and joint-stock land banks have been receiving helpful consideration at the hands of Congress. They can collect their mortgages and of course they don't want to foreclose. Neither do they want to close up shop. Congress has been anxious to provide the answer to the distressing situation by supplying more money to the banks, which is to be accomplished by extending credit to those institutions.

Well if George Washington should come back to the United States on his 200th birthday, he would find a lot of people telling him that he made a mistake in founding the darned country.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

Friends of the Administration in congressional circles at Washington are apparently authority for the report that the administration has put aside international problems for the time being at least, and is to devote its attention exclusively to American problems. With this idea ninety-eight per cent of the people of the United States will be in hearty approval. The statement given out recently that the United States has not been invited to attend the Lausanne meeting on German reparations, and will not send any American observer, also meets with general approval. It is true, of course, that Uncle Sam will participate in the disarmament conference at Geneva, but this is a matter unto itself and one which vitally interests all the nations of the world. Even in respect to this conference, however, there is not much optimism on this side of the Atlantic that anything can be accomplished, and there is said to be even more pessimism in Europe than in America on the subject.

But that Uncle Sam should tackle his own domestic problems first, is a statement that will meet with little dispute here. There are a great many things to be done. Congress, of course, at this time, is showing surprising efficiency and is confounding the critics who predicted that the opening of Congress would bring on another hopeless muddle. The new finance corporation bill has become a law and there seems to be good grounds for predicting that the entire administration non-political program for alleviating the depression, so far as possible, will be enacted with a minimum of political friction. The question of taxation is an issue, a difficult one, but it is becoming more generally realized that confidence and prosperity cannot return until Uncle Sam balances the budget, and this can only be done through higher taxes and lower public expenditures. When the budget is finally balanced we will be fairly started on the road toward stability again.

In the meantime it is well that Congress is not being bothered with international questions, such as adherence to the World Court, debt cancellation and so on. So far as the reparations conference is concerned, Uncle Sam has little to do with this and the Administration has properly recognized this fact by deciding not to send an American representative to Lausanne.

Uncle Sam demanded no reparations, either in cash or territory from Germany. The Allies have already received billions in the way of cash and real estate. Uncle Sam furthermore agreed to forego an amount equalling the debts contracted by the Allies before the armistice was signed, and sees no reason why he should not be paid for debts contracted after the signing of the armistice. The question of ability to pay might properly come up, but this can be taken into consideration after Europe has put its own house in order. Certainly it cannot be reasonably maintained that France, with its hoard of gold and its great expenditures on war preparations is not able to keep up its payments to the United States, and the claims of other countries which owe us money will be carefully looked into.

An ingenious idea has originated in France. It provides many's conditional payments for a moratorium on German reparations and a moratorium on the Allies payments to us. Germany wishes to pay the unconditional reparations in railroad bonds and part of these might be turned over to the United States as partial recompense. The Administration is said to favor this proposal, and properly so. Uncle Sam already has enough unassimilated European bonds and more to drive him an acute attack of indigestion. Besides this scheme would only tie us up with German reparations, something with which we want nothing to do.

By George B. Lockwood

Lord Beaverbrook, probably England's most influential publisher, declares in a published statement that "there must be no more debt payments to the United States." He says that in view of the fact that England loaned more money to the other allies than she received from the United States, she is under no obligation to pay the United States. The British government, he says, acted in effect as an intermediary between the other allied nations in making these loans, and is therefore justified in repudiating her debts to this country, offering instead the ingenious arguments of an international deadbeat. The American people, Lord Beaverbrook concludes, must pay for the World War. England will not.

The United States, which had nothing to do with causing the war, spent directly and indirectly more than any other nation in fighting it, America saved England and the other allies from having to suffer defeat, pay indemnities and lose territory. We discovered after we entered a war to end war and save democracy that the allies in a secret agreement made at London in advance of our entry, had made a preliminary division of territory to be taken from the central powers. At the peace conference, we asked and received nothing, while the allies divided huge indemnities, and territory in area equal to continental United States. Now, declares Lord Beaverbrook, our government should pay to the American people what it borrowed from them to lend to the allies, without the pledged compensation from the allies.

What wonder that the people of Europe have lost confidence in governments whose leaders deliberately propose to swindle the nation which saved them in time of need, and in repudiation of all tenets of national honor and common honesty propose to load the cost of the World War on the American people, while at the same time continuing appeals to the American people to "save Europe" through further sacrifices?

There was shoveled out of the American treasury into the exchequers of the allies during the World War a total of $9,697,518,741.00. Nearly half of this was taken out of our treasury and loaned to European powers after the World War was concluded in the armistice. What authority the officials of the American government had for lending this money after the armistice, under pressure from Europe's busy Beaverbrooks a student of the Constitution would have difficulty in discovering. Certainly at the time the money was advanced, it had been procured from the American people in the sale of United States bonds on the distinct representation that it would come back to our treasury from those who got it and spent it. Certainly there was no known under-

Capt. Pete Campbell sent the tug Geiken to Beaver Island with the mail this morning. It is not expected that the tug will be able to get into the harbor, but will make a landing in Sand Bay or elsewhere.

The Robert Burns birthday anniversary entertainment of the Charlevoix Scottish Club at Odd Fellows' Hall last Saturday evening was a success. Most of the invitations were accepted and the attendance was good. The address of Dr. Hyslop is spoken of by all present as highly entertaining and instructive. The gathering was a rendezvous event in the history of the Scottish Club.

The richest Masonic Lodge in the country is said to be that at the old central mine in Keweenaw county. Just across the line from Calumet. The treasury contained something like $550, and it was decided to purchase Calumet & Hecla mining stock for less than $60 per share. Since then the stock has sold for over $800 per share, while the dividends received have all along been applied to the purchase of more shares, until now a good sized block is held by the lodge.

Petoskey Record:—Capt. Albert E. McCabe, accompanied by his wife arrived in Petoskey over the G. R. & I. Tuesday afternoon. A number of friends and relatives met them at the depot and extended to the Captain a welcoming hand. Life in the Philippines must have agreed admirably with the captain as he looks as hale and strong as when he left two and a half years ago. Mrs. McCabe met him in Chicago. He will remain in Petoskey for some time, before entering, and Petoskey people will undoubtedly have several opportunities to hear Captain McCabe tell of his life and experiences in the Philippines.

Lake Michigan is frozen over between two points.

The new Ferguson House, since it has been closed, has been repainted and calcimined throughout, and will re-open Sunday next, under the same popular management.

There are not less than a dozen fish houses on Round Lake, and their occupants are down from daylight to dark each striving to get the largest string of fish. The catch is mostly herring.

The Eastern Star leap year party at Lewis Grand Opera House last Friday evening was an unqualified success, in every regard. The attendance was large and the enjoyment unrestrained. A delegation was down from East Jordan.

The straits are solid with ice and teams crossing to Bois Blanc Island. An unbroken field extends down Lake Huron as far as eye can see.

A most remarkable phenomenon was witnessed at Traverse City one night last week. At a few minutes before 8 o'clock the water works and the electric light plant gave out simultaneously. The men at the plants concluded that the intake pipes, from the bay had been blocked by floating ice. They went to the bay to investigate and found the bottom of the bay entirely bare, for fully 100 feet from the usual shore line. The water had fallen fully seven feet. Boats of all kinds, steam and sail were grounded. Docks were high and dry upon the beach and pleasure cottages that but an hour before had their steps lapped by the waters of the bay were now seven or eight rods from the water line. For fully an hour the city was in total darkness and many assembled at the beach and upon the docks to view the curious phenomenon. Then with a mighty rush the waters came back to their natural place with the force of a tidal wave. The waves tumbled over each other as though tashed by a mighty wind, and their tops threw clouds of spray many feet into the air. Boats were washed from their moorings and cast many feet upon the beach, dock piles were loosened and came tumbling into shore with the rushing waters and the doors and windows of many cottages were smashed in. The damage was considerable, especially to shipping. Once before this fall the water in the bay fell five and one-half feet in two days but this sudden fall discounts any record kept by the oldest inhabitants. As no strong breeze was blowing from off shore the mystery seems the more inexplicable. Some express the belief that the curious phenomenon was due to seismic influences, yet in this latitude such disturbances are scarcely known and other shore cities would certainly have noted a like fall of the water if this had been the cause.

standing with the Allies that it was a gift rather than a loan. Much of the money loaned to England was for ordinary rather than war purposes: such as the loans for refunding existing obligations and the stabilizing of the price of silver.

Of the principal and interest of these obligations we have made such settlements that their present value representing a cancellation amounting to seven billion dollars. This is about three times the value of all church property in the United States. It is more than twice the value of our entire educational plants, public and private. The interest on this amount at five per cent would pay perpetually the total expenses of half the students in all the colleges, universities and trade and professional schools of the entire United States. This represents a loss of nearly $60 per individual or more than $250 per family in the United States. Think of it! This burden has been imposed on a country which will have paid directly for the big war before the last item of direct cost, interest on obligations, pensions and soldier relief is paid, fully one hundred billion dollars, or nearly half the total wealth of this country at the beginning of the World War. It has been imposed on a people whose increase in national wealth was slowed down half of one per cent of the budget of the debtor countries. Despite these great sacrifices, despite this favorable settlement, we have the proposal of one of the leading men of the European nation traditionally proudest of its credit and its reputation for honor in business, to load what is left of these debts on the American people. And no one much doubts that this will be the end of our great European adventure. There is reason to believe that Lord Beaverbrook expresses opinions dominant in Europe.

THE COST OF BEING UNREADY

When the Budget Bureau reports that two-thirds of the Federal expenditures for the fiscal year 1933 will be absorbed by national defense, principal and interest of the national debt and payments to veterans, many will be appalled at what they assume to be the cost of war. Yet far the greater part of the national debt was incurred in paying the cost of unpreparedness for war and much of the annual expenditure for veterans was paid in pensions to soldiers who need not have fought if a trained army had been prepared.

All our wars were begun with an inadequate force of regular soldiers, the greater part of the army being made up of State militias. The army which was routed at Bladensburg in 1815 was composed of militia. The early successes of Zachary Taylor were due to the fact that four-fifths of his officers were West Point men or had experience in the Florida war and that, according to Upton's "Military Policy of the United States," the discipline and esprit de corps of his troops had been brought to the highest point by six months of training in the camp of instruction at Corpus Christi. Taylor converted raw recruits into trained soldiers.

At the outbreak of the Civil War the regular army consisted of only 16,367 officers and men, and was stationed on the Western frontier or was on the way there, and the militia was "so destitute of instruction and training that they did not merit the name of a military detachment." But Upton says:

"Twenty thousand regular troops at Bull Run would have routed the insurgents, settled the question of military resistance, and relieved us from the path and suspense of four years of war."

The immense pension roll of Civil War veterans and the billions of dollars paid under it were the result of unpreparedness.

When war with Spain came the army had relapsed into the same state as before the Civil War, and the great volunteer force which was enlisted had not been trained when Spain sued for peace, but it did good service in suppressing the Philippine rebellion. Those wars left a long legacy of pensioners.

Until a short time before the United States intervened in the World War President Wilson refused to sanction preparation, but he then introduced the draft and provided for organization and training of a great army. But the first fourteen months which a prepared nation would have spent in fighting were spent in training and we had to borrow the allies' ships to carry half of our men. We had no up-to-date machine guns, artillery and no airplanes, an appropriation of $600,000,000 being wasted almost without a trace.

The heavy expense charged to national defense was not spent on war, as pacifists fondly imagine. It was spent in repairing deficiencies due to unpreparedness and in meeting the enormous consequences. The cost of war has been far exceeded by the cost of being unready for war.—Portland Oregonian.

Armed Youth vs. Pacifism

In Soviet Russia every youth is being taught to bear arms. At the same time he is being moulded by effort of instruction and discipline into the form approved by fanatic Communism. Every source of information of other ideas or ideals is being shut off from the mind of Russian youth. The result must be the preparation of an army of narrow fanatics, unquestioning, uninformed, hostile to all the outside world.

In Fascist Italy somewhat the same process is going on. If Fascist youth is not shut off as completely as the youth of Russia from outside realities, it is being intensively trained in Fascist ideas under cover of a censorship which discourages and suppresses criticism and inquiry. At the same time it is being armed and disciplined as a military body.

Thus two of the greatest powers in Europe are forging two great military weapons to be wielded by a tyrannic control, when the fitting moment arrives, while most of the rest of Europe and America are working eagerly for disarmament. In the United States a well-organized pacifism, supported by American optimism, hatred of war, and the impulse to save money, is bringing about a reduction of our defense in almost every department. The Navy is being reduced, the Army is being cut down and a wide spread propaganda against military training, which advocates of adequate defense demand, is preceding in the churches, in the schools, in the forum of public discussion. Dreams of world peace are treated as pending realities.

O. Henry's Short Stories

Hastily upon his left ear two waiters had pitched Soapy. He'd eaten a meal and had no money, but Soapy was bound for the city prison for the winter, and he'd hoped the waiter would call a cop. But a cop never seemed a easy dream. The nice, warm cell seemed far away.

The Cop and the Anthem—III

Three times Soapy had tried and failed. Now he was desperate. He came upon a policeman in front of a theater. Soapy fell to the sidewalk and yelled drunken gibberish. "Cop—I them Tile lads," said the cop, and turned his back.

At length Soapy stood in front of an old church. Sweet music drifted out to Soapy's ears. It was an anthem his mother had taught him. Soapy made swift resolve. He would make a man of himself—he would find work!

Drawn by John Hix

Soapy felt a hand laid on his shoulder. He turned quickly into the broad face of a policeman. "What are you doing here?" asked the cop. "Nothin'," said Soapy. "Tell it to the Judge," said the cop, "he'll send you to the Island—do anything."

International trade, the navy and industrial planning are economic subjects to be covered upon by speakers such as James Harvey Rogers of Yale, Elmer M. Harrison of Ohio university, F. W. Taussig of Harvard, George Henry Soule, Jr., editor of The New Republic, and Warren B. Hamilton of Yale.

Changes and growth in personality, animal behavior and physiology in education are topics to be taken up by Fred A. Moss of George Washington University, Henry M. Sheen of Yale, Frank N. Freeman of Chicago and others.

Public response to the latest ten lectures lends point to the fact that varied, according to the Council, that they received listening groups in colleges, schools, special neighborhood gatherings and even fishermen of Nova Scotia.
